THE love of home antedates civilization. Cave dwellers fought wild beasts to preserve their rock-ribbed inclosures. Red men waged a constantly losing warfare against the encroachments of the pale-face upon their happy hunting grounds. Whatever his race, whatever his nationality, the white man, in all history, has turned longing eyes toward the place of his nativity. The German never forgets his Fatherland, the happy son of the Emerald Isle has a fondness for his Ireland that has for many centuries won admiration for him; the Britisher can see nothing so good as that which comes from England; the little brown men of the Orient have recently shown their devotion to Japan; even the lynx-eyed yellow foreigner seeks out the shortest route back to China when his wallet begins to bulge with good American dollars.

"Home!"

It has inspired the poet; touched the brush of the painter, the hand of the sculptor and been a theme for the musician. John Howard Payne immortalized himself with his "Home, Sweet Home," and Stephen Collins Foster produced a heart-chord in "My Old Kentucky Home" that fleeting years only serve to make more responsive.

* * *

Payne and Foster.

But no Payne was needed by the Kentuckian to feel the love of home; no Foster was necessary to fill the Kentuckian's breast with pride.

The love of home is as much of the Kentuckian's being as his blood and brawn. He honors Foster's memory because Foster, not a native, saw the State through appreciative glasses. He has a reverence for Payne, believing that Payne had the Kentuckian's love of home in mind when he threw a halo around "home."

Small wonder then that a mere suggestion of Home-coming to the absent sons and daughters of the old State should have met such hearty approval. No matter what the county of their birth; no matter to what climes they had wandered, they turned longingly to the Mother State's knee.

The freshness of the mountain side sends tingling sensations to him of Eastern Kentucky; the aroma of the Pennyrile fills the nostrils of him who left "The Purchase;" the blue waves of the long stretched fields bring mists to the eyes of him who has given up the peaceful valleys of the State's center for turbulent streets; while the roar of the Ohio falls, coupled with industry's hum, brings new music to the ear of him who turned a back on the State's metropolis.

This love of the Kentuckian for his native State passes the understanding of those who have never known the old Commonwealth. To whatever source we may trace it, it's there, indelibly.

No psychological moment was needed for a suggestion of "Home-coming"—every moment was ripe with love and longing. Miss Hardin merely read the thoughts of that great part of Kentucky's family which has moved from the parental roof. Home on a visit from the bleak West, she realized that absence had only made strong home ties stronger. The longing of years was being satisfied. A sorrow for those less fortunate than she swept over her, she turned to the Commercial Club with an ideal thought—and the corner stone of the "Home-coming Week" structure was laid.

* * *

The Home-Coming Structure.

That little whisper came just a year ago. Twelve months have increased its volume to trumpet sounds. The organization which gave ear to the cry of home sickness has found these twelve months the most interesting of its history. As suggestion gave way to plan and plans to operation, in erecting this "home-coming" structure, the interest grew to like proportions. The edifice is finished—ready to receive our guests. If they find half the pleasure within that has come to us in its making, our efforts have not been in vain.

If the time for Home-coming Week were propitious, certainly those who had remained at home were ready to undertake the pleasing role of entertainer. Four years before a New Yorker, while in Louisville, had remarked the cordiality of its people and proposed an event along the lines of the "Old Home Weeks" of England. Two years later one who had spent a decade in Kentucky made the suggestion to a prominent citizen of Louisville that the Falls City have a Home-coming for its former residents. When Miss Hardin on a bright sunny afternoon—it must have been June 13, 1905—called the Commercial Club by 'phone, and brought up all memories of home life by her proposal, the moment certainly was a propitious one. The mind of the Commercial Club had been cultivated seemingly especially for the seed thus sown.

The successive steps of the fifty-two weeks which followed have measured a long distance between contemplation and completion.

The club turned to the Federal census of 1900 and found nearly 600,000 native born Kentuckians in other States. We then faced the stupendous task of enrolling the names and addresses of these Kentuckians. A short item in the Louisville press brought a shorter list of names from a former Kentuckian in Cleveland, Ohio. Realizing that we could not depend entirely upon the public prints to secure for us the names we so much desired, a notice of the intentions of the club was sent to every member, and inclosed therein was a self-addressed postal card with six blank lines under the following wording: "Please send Home-coming invitations to the following former Kentuckians." From the responses received it appeared that the membership of the club had friends and relatives scattered throughout the world.

The nucleus thus formed gave hope that in time the club should have enrolled 25,000 or 30,000 names. Next the newspapers of the State were asked to send their "single wrapper" lists, it being thought that papers singly wrapped going outside of the State would be mailed in a majority of cases to former residents. The editors responded nobly to this call. Our lists immediately jumped beyond the 5,000 we had practically 100,000 names enrolled, four times as many as we originally expected, and about 18 per cent. of the total number of ex-Kentuckians as shown by the Federal census. It might be stated here that fully 50 per cent. of these names came to us from outside sources, that is from Kentuckians living elsewhere, who wished their friends and relatives remembered.

When the first 5,000 names had been secured, an order was placed with a printing establishment for a handsomely prepared invitation. Copy was furnished to include a brief outline of the programme. An artist was employed to make the design for the first page, and the services of one of the best known printing superintendents in the South were enlisted toward the end that the invitation should be preserved as a souvenir by those receiving it. Hundreds and hundreds of letters on file at Home-coming headquarters speak in volumes of the success of the artist and the printer combined in making the invitation an attractive one.

With this invitation was sent a blank card to be used for acceptance. Another blank card containing six lines for names of other ex-Kentuckians, as previously described, was also enclosed. The first invitation was mailed "the week before Christmas." From that time until a fortnight ago, the printers were kept busy issuing additional invitations. It is impossible for one who has not been in daily touch with the mails that have reached the Home-coming Committee to realize the love and affection that former Kentuckians bear their native State. To say that the invitation struck a responsive chord is putting it mildly. Men who have passed the allotted years of scripture were moved to tears in longing for their old home place. Women wrote as feelingly as only women can write. The verses that the event has inspired have found a worthy place in daily newspapers. Not a few have made the occasion the excuse for giving their thoughts in music, while artists have shown their appreciation in descriptive pencil sketches or more enduring oil canvases.

The second week of June was selected because returning sons and daughters would find their beloved land clothed at that time in nature's royal garb. In June the sun shines brightest in Kentucky. To further paraphrase the Lexington Judge's famous poem, in June the Bluegrass is bluest in Kentucky; in June the brooks are purest; the fields are ripest; the shade is densest; womanhood the sweetest and manhood the best—in June in Kentucky.

The committee had a world of subjects from which to draw for the main features of a five days' programme. It was not so much what to put in as to what should be left out. Naturally we could give to the first day no other name than that of "Welcome" and "Reception." With a unanimity quite remarkable, it was the determination to honor on the second day the memory of the man who had honored Kentucky in song. All of us thought alike when a name for the third day was under discussion for certainly no one will deny that the pioneer who paved the way of civilization into Kentucky is entitled to this distinction. Wishing to give evidence of gratification over the achievements of our men and women who have helped to make other States illustrious, we gave the fourth day a name that suggests the great field of the Kentuckian's usefulness. Facing squarely the certainty of another separation, we sought to give a grander meaning to the song "Till We Meet Again" on the closing day.

The opening exercises have given us the occasion for paying just tribute to her who suggested a Home-coming Week. The second day gave the school children of Kentucky the opportunity of erecting out of their pennies, nickels and dimes a statue of Mr. Foster, which later is to be cast in bronze and given an abiding place in the new Capitol at Frankfort. The school children have gone further, and will silently sing his praises as in chorus they sing his songs.

As perfectly as the art of the actor will permit, Daniel Boone is again to wage war with the red man in the "dark and bloody ground" on the day which is named for him. The handsome bronze figure which has twice occupied positions of distinction at the two greatest expositions in the history of America, and which has now taken a place permanently in a picturesque spot in a woodland, the like of which was always the admiration of the pioneer, is also to be unveiled; while at night the central figure of a spectacular pageant is to be the man whose memory on this day we will honor. On Greater Kentucky day, we have prepared to hear from some of our most distinguished returning sons, and at night to make a place for these faithful bands of former Kentuckians which have organized in various States in the country to keep forever alive the respect, admiration and love they bear their native State, the ardor of which is made to grow warmer as fanned by the flame of speech and song.

* * *

The Historic Log Cabin.

Having given to the country its two Presidents during the greatest civil conflict of history, we make no apology in placing on exhibition at one of the parks the log cabin in which each first saw the light of day, and in displaying on the walls of the building in which the greater part of the ceremonies will be conducted a picture of the home where was born and reared the other.

On the closing day, we have made a place for the ministers of the gospel who have left Kentucky, and at night we are to wish all "God speed and many returns."

Authors and dramatists would find in the throng we to-day will welcome characters that would make a book of fiction and a stage setting which would live through centuries. Woven into the week's play, they would give to the Twentieth century a melodrama without an equal and a prose poem that would not die. We have with us children of Kentucky's great family who have come home from foreign lands, others who have traversed the continent on their return. We have with us some who have filled high places at the nation's capital, and others who have served their adopted States in the chair of the Chief Executive. We have with us daughters who have been true helpmates to the men of their choice in fighting life's harder battles on the frontier of the West. We have with us representatives of all four estates who have marked their names high on the roll of fame. We have with us the man who can tell the story of hardship in the gold campaign of '49, and another who can depict most clearly his ever vasion of the land "where rolls the Oregon." We have with us men who have turned the key to fortune and others who have met poverty unflinchingly. We have with us the man who sold his only horse to come back home, and again the man who walked wearily home over a route of many hundred miles.

* * *

Here All Are One.

But here all are one—the more fortunate of our wanderers clasps the hand of the less fortunate. Many come back to stay, but more to again go away. The picture has its bright side as well as its dark, but over both sides of the canvas there flows a ray of love light that children of other States can never appreciate.

Let us hope that this Home-coming may in some way result in either a annual or biennial celebration built upon the same lines.

Home-Coming Week and How It Was Suggested

HOME-COMING!

That word is the "open sesame" to what a world of pictures locked in memory's gallery! What a panorama of mental visions float in the memory when that magic word is uttered!

For some a chain of pictures starts of green hills, a shady, lazy brook, a fragrant orchard laden with luscious fruit, glorious June-time, with its wealth of perfect days; for others it is of a barefoot boy following the plow in the long, dusty corn row with the heat rising dizzily from the parched ground, of long days of hard work almost beyond his strength, with no time to play or read, with the call to get up in the morning coming long before nature has brought rest to his tired frame. For others pictures come of the log schoolhouse with its puncheon floors, or the little church in the grove, with its uncomfortable straight-backed seats. For some the memories are pleasant; for others bitter, but even the bitter ones are softened by Time.

The history of Home-coming Week is interesting.

To a former Kentucky woman belongs the praise of having conceived the project, and to her earnest letter to the Commercial Club is due the successful carrying out of her plan.

To Miss Louise Lee Hardin, club woman, editor and vice president of the Kentucky Society, of Denver, Col., belongs the credit of suggesting the great reunion of Kentucklans in the metropolis of their mother State.

It was during the early part of July, 1905, that Miss Hardin, then on a visit to Louisville, called up R. E. Hughes, secretary of the Commercial Club, and suggested Home-coming Week. It was her first visit to Kentucky for a long time and so overjoyed was she to be back in her old Kentucky home, so pleasant did she find the renewal of its associations, that she could not resist the desire to do something to bring the other Kentucklans back for a few days at least. It was at a time of the year when the thought of vacation carries away from the work at hand the minds of even the most conscientious business men to thoughts of the home in the country where they spent their boyhood days. Even at the Commercial Club, Secretary Hughes and his corps of assistants paused to forget for a moment the necessity for bringing new industries to Louisville and to allow themselves to drift to visions of the old country home where they were born and to plan how to crowd into a two-weeks' vacation all the necessary trips to renew the associations and friendships of bygone days.

MISS LOUISE LEE HARDIN

When she called up the Commercial Club, Miss Hardin explained her reasons for calling Mr. Hughes and asked if the Commercial Club would not undertake to arrange a meet of distinguished Kentucklans who had won fame and fortune outside of its borders. Mr. Hughes suggested that the invitation be more general, and, being much impressed with the idea, requested Miss Hardin to write a letter which could be read to the directors of the club, setting forth her plan in order that it might be formally acted upon by the club.

The first difficulty which presented itself in arranging for Home-coming Week was to secure the names of the 600,000 former Kentuckians now living in other States and Territories. A beginning was made by writing to the editors of all the newspapers in Kentucky and asking for what is known as their single-wrapper list. In this manner the club secured the names of several thousands of former Kentucklans, to whom invitations for Home-coming Week were sent, with a postal inclosed upon which they were requested to send the names and addresses of other former Kentuckians.

Twice before Miss Hardin's suggestion, the Commercial Club was urged to inaugurate a "Home-coming." The first suggestion was made during the Knights Templar Conclave in 1901, by Arthur McArthur, publisher of the Troy Northern Budget and the Home Budget, of Troy, N. Y. So impressed was Mr. McArthur with Kentucky hospitality that he prophesied that this State could succeed in an enterprise of this kind far beyond that ever reached before.

A similar suggestion was made by Mr. W. T. Rolph, a former resident, and manager for Dun's Mercantile Agency, now manager at Philadelphia. In an open letter to a Louisville newspaper under date of August 5, 1903, Mr. Rolph suggested an Old Home Week for the State of Kentucky. The suggestion was approved editorially by several of the local newspapers, but no action was taken at that time.

LONG before the first Kentucky mother made a home in that wilderness known as the dark and bloody ground, the note was sounded that was to give the pitch for her character and send out vibrations to echo through ages. The first white woman to cross into the vast meadow-land lying beyond the mountains was a Mrs. Inglis, who in 1756 was captured with her two children and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Draper, and dragged by the Indians across the borderland to the untrodden forests of their favorite hunting ground.

After unspeakable hardships Mrs. Inglis effected her escape. Like the Israelites of old, she wandered, not for forty years, but for forty days in the wilderness, sometimes traveling as far as twenty miles a day. Suffering, not only from the perils of her surroundings, but from the treachery of a companion, she persevered and at last regained her home on top of the Alleghanies, proving once more that when a woman wills she may, even though Indians attempt to restrain her.

* * *

Rebecca Bryant Boone.

But while Mrs. Inglis was of the same stuff, she cannot be classed properly among the pioneers, for she was brought to Kentucky against her will and escaped at her first opportunity. History seems to concede that the first white woman to make a home in Kentucky was Rebecca Bryant Boone. Her name deserves reverent mention, though romance has so impinged on history that only a few deductions can be drawn concerning her. Of education as we of to-day regard it, she had none; of face and form there is no reliable record, though she was reputed beautiful and her descendants were and are a handsome race, but of character and deed there are deep, moving lines proving her to be one of the heroines of the earth. With her sons and her little daughter, Jemima, she followed her husband to his camp in the wilderness. At the outset, her eldest son was murdered before her eyes. Dismayed friends, through fear of a like fate, deserted her. Yet with her sorrow fresh, her tears undried, she went on. She set the pace for Kentucky women, she blazed the way; her courage, her endurance, her resourcefulness, formed the corner stone of Kentucky history.

The thought of this Kentucky mother inspires awe and spurs universal womanhood to something high and good. Two of her sons were killed, her daughter captured by the red savages, her husband twice taken prisoner and mourned as dead; yet she unflinchingly performed her duties in a community where every brave heart counted for an example. Wearing suspense, lacerating sorrow were her portion, yet she stands, stanch and sturdy, a monument and example of the pioneer woman at her finest and best.

Has any one ever tried to imagine how the history of the State might now read had the Boone women, the Calloways, the Blands, the Garys, the Hogans—the first white women to come willingly to Kentucky—been of other stuff than they were? When the intrepid Daniel returned for his family to the Yadkin settlement in North Carolina he told such enticing tales of the beauty, the wealth, the possibilities of the unpeopled land that a number of families consented to return with him. A band of some eighty souls started forth in the highest expectation and enthusiasm. On the very threshold of their long journey they were attacked by savages and six of their number killed. The faint-hearted were in the majority and voted to turn back. The brave Boones made another start, their way rendered ten times more perilous because of their reduced numbers. Suppose the original party had made the trip unmolested; suppose the stately forest had ambushed no Indians; suppose the flowers had bloomed, the birds had sung, the tender bluegrass, unwet by human blood, had lured the entire party through a real Eden to Boonesborough? Some craven blood would have polluted the stream at its very fountain-head and history might record a different tale. Instead, none but the bravest could face the perils of the Wilderness Road, and it is from these that the marvelous story of the State has its beginning.

The Boone party came in the summer of 1775. They were followed in early autumn by the families of Col. Richard Calloway, William Poague and John Stagner. Some of the first arrivals went on to Harrodstown, and dispute waxes hot as to whether it or Boonesborough was the earlier settlement. But as even the warmest advocates of Harrodstown only claim a difference of twenty days, a compromise may be reached by admitting that Boonesborough was the first fortified station in Kentucky, and Harrodstown the first settlement or town. Both were baptized in blood, and both record deeds of men and women of equal bravery.

Though over a century and a quarter has passed, though civilization has made life easy, though prosperity and immunity have diluted the once strong blood, enough of it still runs in Kentucky veins to-day to respond in sympathy to the story of suffering, endurance and dangers experienced by the early mothers of our State.

* * *

One Sunday afternoon in July, 1776, three girls from the Boonesborough fort were frolicking in a canoe on the Kentucky river. They were Jemima Boone, aged fourteen; Elizabeth and Frances Calloway, aged fourteen and sixteen—children, we of to-day would call them. Five Indians surprised and captured them, though the girls fought valiantly, screaming for help, beating the savages with their oars—fracturing one skull, so the story runs—in vain. When they failed to return to the fort Boone, with the three betrothed husbands of the girls (the Kentuckian took his wife from the cradle in those days) set out on foot, leaving word for the men of the settlement to follow on horseback. They found a sure trail, for the girls, in face of the threatening tomahawk and horrible death, had marked the way. Twigs, bits of fringe, a line of pebbles, a trinket, a long hair said: "We are still living; we have passed this way; we know you will come; press on."

This was not until the third morning that the girls saw any signs of the rescuing party. Unfortunately the Indians saw also, but Boone and his three companions fired and rushed into the camp without a moment's delay. A brief combat followed, and the Indians took to their dusky heels. What a Home-coming Week that must have been in old Boonesborough when the rescued girls were returned unharmed! One of these girls is conceded by most historians to have afterward been the mother of the first white child born of parents married in Kentucky. Elizabeth (or Betsey) Calloway married Samuel Henderson a month after the rescue, August 7, 1776, and her daughter, Fanny Henderson, was born May 29, 1777.

Again:

Two brothers named Cook were attacked by one hundred Indians in their cabin, at Quinn's Station, on South Elkhorn, and killed. Their two wives were left to defend themselves and their three children. There was one empty gun. The women barricaded the door, which was stout and thick. One of them split a piece of lead, rounded it to fit the rifle, and, quickly ramming powder, took deliberate aim through a chink in the logs, and killed an Indian. Enraged, the savages tried to batter down the door, but, failing, mounted the roof and fired it. One of the women climbed to the rafters, and with water handed up to her by the other put out the fire as fast as it was started. The water gave out. She broke a lot of eggs and quenched the flames. The eggs gave out. Then, in the blood of her dead husband, clothing was saturated and spread on the flames. This baffled the Indians, who retired a little distance to climb trees and consult together, and seeing rescue coming from the nearest settlement, fled from the approach of the avenging white man.

Another tale is told of one Betsey Montgomery, a girl of twelve (a great aunt or something of Mark Twain) a connection of the brave pioneer, Benjamin Logan. Her home was attacked by Indians, her father killed. She and her sister bolted and barricaded themselves in the cabin. There could be but one ending in a fight between two girls and a lot of savages. Betsey climbed out of the chimney and though closely pursued, ran to Pettit's station, over two miles distant, whence she obtained help for her sister, forwarded the alarm to Logan's, thus saving many lives.

It is a story without end of woman's valor, devotion, endurance and presence of mind. Mrs. Samuel Daviess made a wonderful escape after a successful fight, saving herself and seven children; Keturah Leitch Taylor, at the risk of her life, rode back into danger to warn a lagging comrade; Mrs. White defended her home successfully against nine Indians, and so on.

* * *

A List of Heroines.

Then there was Bryant's Station.

As the heroic action of the women going to the spring for water in the known presence of the ambushed Indians, has been fittingly commemorated by the Lexington Chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution, and as ample accounts of the proceedings that marked the ceremonies of the erection of a memorial fountain have been published, the story need not here be repeated. It may be found in the twelfth publication of the Filson club called "Bryant's Station." But the names of these heroines cannot be omitted from any article on Kentucky women. They are:

Mrs. Jemima Suggett Johnson and her daughter Betsy; Mrs. Sara Paige Craig and her daughters, Betsy, Sally, Nancy and Polly; Mrs. Lucy Hawkins Craig and her daughters, Polly and Frankie; Mrs. Polly Hawkins Craig and her daughter Sally; Mrs. Elizabeth Johnson Craig and her daughters Polly and Nancy; Mrs. Jane Craig Sanders and her daughters Polly, Betsy and Lydia; Mrs. Elizabeth Craig Cave and her daughters Hannah and Polly; Mrs. Mary Herndon Ficklin and her daughter, Philadelphia; Mrs. Fanny Sanders Mrs. Harriet Morgan Nelson and Mrs. Mildred Davis Suggett.

One cannot say more than is found in the closing words of the inscription on the beautiful fountain erected by Kentucky women over the celebrated spring:

"The Women of Ancient Sparta pointed out the Heroic Way—
The Women of Pioneer Kentucky trod it."

The pity is that all the stories have not so good an ending. A long list of martyrs makes the heart bleed. There was Mrs. John Anderson, who after a heroic defense was scalped and her two children killed; Hannah Barnett was captured and scalped; Miss Jennie Gass was killed—the bloody tale runs through many volumes.

The daughters of these mothers show the stuff one would expect. Life became easier in one sense only. As the settlements increased the Government sent troops under able Generals, and savage Indians no longer threatened life, but occupations multiplied. The women became famous housekeepers; they spun, wove, baked, brewed, churned, ground; they sewed, they provided everything for large households. For these Kentucky mothers were mothers indeed. The wife of our first Governor, Susanna Hart Shelby, was the mother of ten, but ten were nothing—twelve, sixteen, twenty were not unusual. No minister of those days had to take race suicide for his text.

Education's Rough Road.

If the wilderness road blazed by Boone was rough what must be said of the ruts and obstacles that impeded progress on the early Kentucky road to that knowledge which is power? The Boones were of sturdy stock and courage; they knew the way of the Indian, the path of the deer, the haunt of the panther; they understood how to force nature to provide subsistence, but they knew nothing of the crooked paths of science and literature. Daniel himself, whose education was nipped in its early bud by an unfortunate choice of a drunken preceptor, could barely read and write. In forcing a path through the trackless forest he was an adept; in hunting, in fishing, in woodcraft he had no equal. As for Rebecca, though romance has endowed her with beauty and history has ranked her among the world's heroines, nothing is said that would lead one to suppose she had any book-learning. To the Boones the State owes its beginning, but its advance in education belongs to a different sort of settler.

Some of Boone's companions, while not lacking in those qualities that finally brought security to the homes of the early settlers, were intellectually superior to the great hunter. The McAfees, the McDowells, the Logans, the Aliens were people of some culture. Mental food was as necessary to them as provision for the physical man. Hence education became a part of the early life in Kentucky. Who then made the Wilderness Road leading to knowledge?

And here again woman is prominent. Kentucky historians agree in giving the name of a woman as the first school teacher in Kentucky. Mrs. Jane Coomes she is called by some, Mrs. William Coomes by others. It is possible she was the wife of one William Coomes, whose exciting adventure with Indians fills a page in Kentucky history. He was a Roman Catholic, so the first school that opened the wide fields that the State to-day allots to education was probably a Catholic school. It is a shame that the record of this pioneer is so meager, but in the erection of Kentucky's monuments Mrs. Coomes should be remembered. However primitive may have been her methods, she led. She was the Boone blazing a path through the wilderness of ignorance.

Imagination may well be excused for some indulgence concerning this first school. Inside the stockade, it was, let us say, at Boonesborough, though history is uncertain. The pupils probably went as unwillingly, as snail-like with their shining faces as in the imagine poet's day. Many of them may have carried fire-arms (can one blame the Kentuckian for his present fondness for concealed and deadly weapons?), and as the horn book made the rounds each sturdy girl or boy of the forest read with dragging finger on the word, with ear a-cock for the war-cry ready, the girls with their mothers, the boys with their valiant fathers, each to take a part in the defense of the fort.

If Mrs. Coomes was progressive she probably taught things not on the horn book. One can well fancy a catechism of self-defense being included in her curriculum, as:

"What would you do if you went after your ball in the bushes and saw a skulking Indian?"

"If Indians captured you and your sister how would you leave clews so that the rescue party could follow?"

"If a buffalo crossed the trail when you were carrying a message to other settlers, if a deer's large eyes glowed out of the darkness, if a bear awakened you at night prowling too near the cabins, if you heard a panther's padded tread when you went for water to the spring how would you behave?"

Youth of those days had to have a ready answer for many such questions; an answer of quick action, of unerring judgment, so that some instruction must have been given either between the droning of the horn book or round the family fire, where tales of what their brave fathers and mothers had done were repeated.

Education has not had an easy path in Kentucky, though earnestness and perseverance have never let the cause flag. From the first the Kentucky woman has led the cause of learning. When that first school was started others followed until each settlement had one of its own. After the defeat of the Indians by Gen. Wayne, when settlers no longer lived in fear of savage attacks, schools began to be schools. Wealth increased, abundance reigned, finer arts succeeded warlike accomplishments. Kentucky became so civilized that Boone found the land he had settled too crowded and removed with his family to another unexplored forest.

The first female Sunday-school started in Frankfort in 1819, under the tuition of Mrs. Margaretta Brown. The records show prodigies of intellectual effort. Cornelia Crittenden, aged six, learned by heart in one year 2,111 verses of scripture. (Poor Cornelia!) Mary Lafon, in one month, memorized 364 verses. Let the modern child with one verse a Sunday and that such as "He opened His mouth and taught them, saying," or "Jesus wept"—high favorites in these days—hang their lazy heads in shame.

A premonition of the new woman began to be felt: Susan Lucy Barry, born in Lexington in 1807, married to Col. James Taylor, of Frankfort, in 1824, at the age of fifteen delivered a fervid plea for the higher education of woman before a large assemblage of shocked but interested law-makers.

By 1832 the fever for education may be said to have been rampant, and most of the schools were taught by women. Mrs. Julia A. Tevis, known throughout the State, born in 1799 of pioneer parents, started a school that led the cause of education for over sixty years. "Science Hill Academy," in Shelbyville, has played a worthy part in the State's history.

The sessions of these schools of the early thirties were held during the summer time because of the distance between houses connected only by dirt roads so dreadful that it was almost impossible to traverse them in the winter season.

An Age of Strenuous Womanhood.

It was an age of strenuous womanhood. Even the names denote energy: Maria Elizabeth Pocahontas, Frances Ann Patsey Paulina, Martha Jane, Susanna Lucy, Sophronisba Sarah. And the studies matched the names. A list of books studied by a girl of that day is here given. She began when she was eight years old and finished at eleven:

Paley's Moral Philosophy, Comstock's Natural History, Murray's Grammar, Watts on the Mind, Locke's Essay on the Human Understanding, Geography of the Heavens, the Shorter Catechism, besides Latin, French, music, the Bible and hymns to be learned by rote. For pleasure-reading there was a book of stories called "The Looking Glass," Fox's Book of Martyrs and Pilgrim's Progress. Miss Edgeworth was also quite popular, her "Moral Tales" well conned, though her novels were not put into the hands of school girls. Imagine being forced to hide "Belinda" under the mattress and read her between the blankets in the small hours. Oh, children of those days were given every advantage.

At the age of eight years she was a pupil at Mrs. Tillery's Female Academy in Versailles. The school was so large that it had to have an assistant teacher. This was a Miss Adline Ben Ali, who afterwards married a Mr. Haggin, and was the mother of Mr. James B. Haggin, whose farm is to-day one of the show places of the country. Competition aided the cause, and a rival academy was started. It was also conducted by a woman, a Mrs. Isette, the mother of the late Judge J. K. Goodloe, of this city, whose daughter to-day ranks high in the literary world.

At Mrs. Tillery's the young Sophie, having well digested her philosophies, natural, moral and mental, having her Watts on the tip of her mind, her Locke at her fingers' ends and her Shorter Catechism and her longer hymns ready to spout at a moment's notice, was pronounced ripe for the finishing touches. Accordingly, her half brother, a Lieutenant in the navy, made the journey to Versailles to carry her to Washington to a highly fashionable school in the equally fashionable suburb of Georgetown. The roads were impossible for a stage coach, so the journey was made in a two-horse carriage. It consumed about three weeks to follow the old turnpike to the capital, for the ruts were often deep enough for even the stoutest wheels to be lost to sight.

The season was winter, but Sophie was well-equipped to stand its rigors. She wore a low-necked merino, a pelerine of silk trimmed with fur, a sable hood, but little regard for chances of having to walk in the mud, her slippers were replaced by cloth gaiters, thin of sole and low of cut. Much against the taste of her mother, she for the first time wore "pantalettes," which the good people of Versailles considered decidedly stagey.

The change from Presbyterian Puritanism to life in the gay capital was marked. At the Misses English, Sophie was taught dances in which she crossed her feet and twinkled her toes; she drew castles and trees from malignant prints; she made the most of her fair hands and rounded arms in playing the harp and guitar; she worked samplers in the latest cross-stitch; she was taught a new way of entering a drawing-room—a "glide"—that would do honor to our modern prize cakewalk.

Many afterward distinguished women were her companions. Cupid had a class in school. One Harriet Williams figures prominently in Sophie's memories. She was a very beautiful but portionless girl, whom relatives were providing with education with perhaps an eye to her future self-support. On her way to school one morning her face and figure caught the eye of the Russian Minister, Alexander de Bodisco, who fell head over heels—if a stiff Russian can do such a thing—and swore he would wed her or die. With due regard for ceremony, an offer of marriage was made, a betrothal announced and the wedding day set. But Washington could not see one of her daughters go to a distinguished foreigner empty-handed. The bride was dowered by friends and relatives with fitting generosity. All the town turned out for the nuptials. Henry Clay and Daniel Webster were the groomsmen, the young schoolmates were bridesmaids. The bride afterward became celebrated, both in this country and Russia, for her charm and beauty.

When Sophie was finished to suit the exacting taste of her preceptress she was carefully intrusted to the charge of the lieutenant and returned over the muddy roads by means of the coach and pair to her home in Versailles. As may be imagined her new ideas, ways and manners created a sensation bordering on consternation. Some of the accomplishments she had acquired with such pains and expense were tabooed forthwith. Her Presbyterian mother actually forbade her to practice the "glide" on entering the room. She would have no daughter of hers display such a "play actor" trick. The miniature that Sophie at the age of seventeen brought home from Washington is reproduced on this page.

One has only to contrast these reminiscences which are typical of the time with the standards that to-day prevail to discover how real has been the advance. And, be it said in all modesty—here the Kentucky woman has done her full duty.

In Literature's Realm.

From the study of books to the making of them was a natural step. As schools multiplied and flourished the Kentucky woman turned to authorship, and by that curious psychology law that rules new nations, her first literary efforts took the form of poetry. All lists of early Kentucky writers show these names:

Mrs. Sophie Helen Oliver, of Lexington; Miss Mary Rootes Thornton McAboy, of Bourbon county; Mrs. Sarah T. Bolton, of Newport; Mrs. Mary E. Wilson Betts, of Maysville; Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Nealy, of Louisville; Mrs. Mary Eulalie Fee Shannon, of Flemingsburg; Mrs. Annie Chambers Ketchum, of Georgatown; Miss Mattie Griffith, of Louisville; Mrs. Sallie M. B. Piatt, of Henry county; Mrs. Sally J. Hancock, Mrs. Laura Katherine Ford, of Owen county; Mrs. Nellie Marshall McAfee, of Louisville; Mrs. Mary L. Cady, of Maysville; Mrs. Alice McClure Griffin, of Newport. Besides these there are several adopted daughters who came so early to Kentucky that they truly belong to her—Amelia Welby and the beautiful Rosa Vertner Jeffreys Johnson.

But brilliant as were some of these lights for the day and the hour, they did not shine far beyond the borders of the State. This was in part owing to conditions literary throughout the whole country. The typewriter and telephone had not become disagreeable necessities; magazines were few and far between, publishers neither daring nor far-seeing. Incipient genius languished unacknowledged in Kentucky as elsewhere and many a literary gem sent its rays through circumscribed limits. It is only in recent years that Kentucky women have earned any world-wide recognition through their pens. Though late, they make a brave showing.

Days of Wealth and Ease.

During the days preceding the Civil War it is to be feared that the Kentucky woman in the fertile meadows of the bluegrass region and its vicinity lived too luxuriously. She was beautiful, fascinating. Men set her on a pedestal for worship, or she was kept in cotton wool and shielded from all that rough toil that filled the life of the pioneers. Willing slaves did her bidding; masters in all the arts made her a creature of accomplishments; in short she was too much the idle heroine of romance, to whom songs were sung in serenade, for whom duels were fought and by whom feuds were engendered. Her only occupation was to sit still, as the men would not even let her hold her own hands.

Yet even here the pioneer spirit shows. The Kentucky woman feared nothing, but lacking heroic outlet her daring took the form of many pranks that were not only highly ingenious, but

KENTUCKY'S NEW $1,000,000 STATE HOUSE

FIRST CAPITOL AT FRANKFORT.

THE NEW CAPITOL OF KENTUCKY

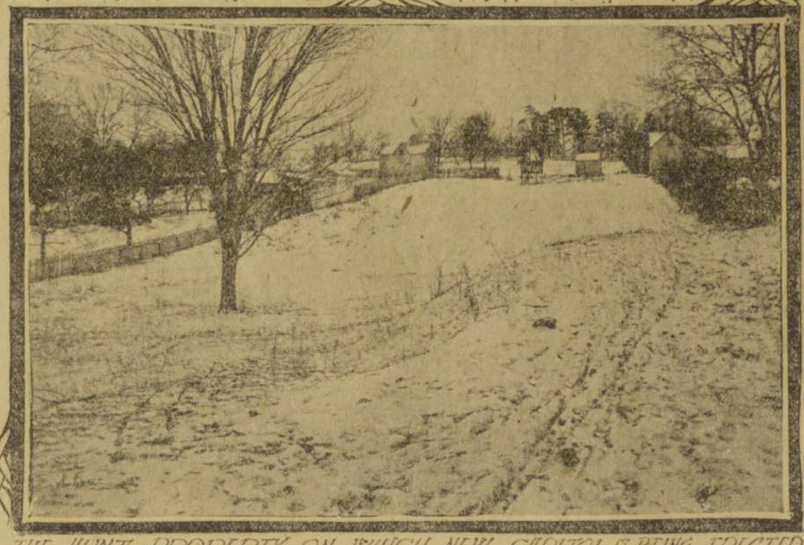

THE PRESENT CAPITOL OF KENTUCKY

BREAKING GROUND FOR THE NEW STATE HOUSE.

THE HUNT PROPERTY ON WHICH NEW CAPITOL IS BEING ERECTED.

FRANKFORT, Ky., May 12.—[Special.]—The proudest day that Frankfort has seen since that on which the Legislature appropriated one million dollars for the purpose of erecting the new Capitol building, now under construction, will be that on which is celebrated the laying of the corner stone, in the presence of thousands of her citizens, welcome home to witness the scene. They are sure to rejoice with the little city among the hills, and the citizens of the proud old Commonwealth, that she is to have a structure in keeping with the necessities of public business and the wealth and pride of one of the greatest States and best people of the Union.

The occasion will witness the gathering, besides the former State officials, of many distinguished guests from other States, former Kentuckians, and an elaborate programme will be arranged.

The new Capitol building is the result of a prolonged fight carried on at nearly every session of the Legislature since the location was first established at Frankfort, in which Lexington was the aggressive antagonist, with Louisville and sometimes Danville entering into the contest. The unwillingness of the metropolis to see the capital removed unless brought there aided the old town surrounded by the hills and rich in history to come off victor in a fight in which the greatest statesmen Kentucky has produced have taken a hand as the contest proceeded from time to time. Henry Clay sought when a member of the Kentucky Legislature to have the capital removed to Lexington. In one of his characteristic speeches he opposed the valley location later spoken of by Roger Hanson that one could not get from Frankfort without climbing a hill, crossing the river or going through a tunnel.

In 1891 the Constitutional Convention practically settled the fight by providing in Section 255: "The seat of government shall continue in the city of Frankfort, unless removed by the vote of two-thirds of each house of the first General Assembly which convenes after the adoption of this Constitution."

Ex-Gov. J. Proctor Knott was one of the champions of Frankfort in leading the fight in the Constitutional Convention in which this provision was adopted, and his speech was one of his best efforts, and on the point of the contract formed in the original location here he said:

"As time can never absolve us from an honest obligation, so time can never efface the stigma of repudiation. This contract is as binding upon Kentucky as it was when she pledged her honor to its observance in the dark hour of her adversity nearly a century ago. She is the same sovereign Commonwealth, proud of the peerless purity of her honor now as she was then, and I trust in God she may continue so as long as the stars shall keep their courses in the heavens and the earth remain in its appointed orbit."

The Breckinridges, C. J. Bronston and others fought for the removal, while former Senator William Lindsay, Judge Thomas H. Hines and a long list of noted citizens fought at times for the location to remain here.

It was not until 1904 that the Legislature, on the recommendation of Gov. Beckham, passed the act providing for the new building by almost unanimous vote, although almost every message of the preceding Governors and of Gov. Beckham in 1902 had urged the provision for new buildings.

The building is under charge of a commission composed of Gov. Beckham, as chairman; Secretary of State McChesney, Auditor Hager, Attorney General Hays and Treasurer Bosworth provided for in the law. Last August they awarded the plans drawn by Frank M. Andrews, the architect, to the General Supply and Construction Company, the work to be completed within twenty months. The foundation stone is of concrete with granite base, while the building is being constructed of Bedford stone. The Legislature of 1906 passed an additional appropriation of $250,000 to provide for marble interior. When the building is completed it will be a monument to modern architecture.

The extra session of 1905 provided for the purchase of the plot of forty acres of ground situated at the south end of Main street, in South Frankfort, on which the building is located, affording one of the most beautiful sites to be found, and when completed easy of view from points around Frankfort for miles, while a splendid view may be had to passengers through the city.

The original bill making the appropriation of a million dollars for the new capitol provided for the erection on the site of the old buildings, and a Louisville paper, realizing the need for more ground, upon which to erect the buildings, inaugurated a system of interviews among the members of the General Assembly which developed the fact that a majority of the members favored another site in Frankfort, and Gov. Beckham at once called the Legislature in extraordinary session with the result stated.

Just how the offices will be arranged and located in the new capitol will, of course, be determined later, but the Capitol Commissioners and architect have planned the building so that the departments whose heads and attaches are necessarily in daily communication shall be convenient to each other. To this end the offices of the Governor and Secretary of State adjoin, and on the same floor with them, the second, are to be the departments of Auditor, Treasurer and Attorney General, the other members of the State Sinking Fund Commission. On this floor also are to be located the Appellate Judges and Clerk, and the State library. The minor departments are to be on the first floor of the building, and the third floor is to be given over altogether to the General Assembly and its officers and employes.

The floor plans as arranged are as follows:

Second Floor—Just over the entrance will be the handsome reception rooms of the Executive Department, which will be the handsomest room in the building. From it, to the right, will be the Governor's offices, that of his secretary, the Assistant Secretary of State and the Secretary of State. Just south of the last-named office will be the general board room in which the Sinking Fund Commission, the State Board of Valuation and other boards will meet. Across the building to the south will be the department and private offices of the Auditor of Public Accounts. To the east of these will be the State Library, and beyond it the offices of the Treasurer and the consultation room of the Appellate Court. This last-named room will lead into the Appellate Court room, at the eastern end of the building. South of this room will be the department of the Clerk of the Court and the offices of the Attorney General of State.

Third Floor—This floor will be given over altogether to the General Assembly, its officers, and the State Board of Equalization, which is in session but a part of each year. The dimensions of the Hall of Representatives will be eighty-seven feet nine inches by seventy-five feet six inches, and of the Senate Chamber fifty-six feet eight inches by seventy-two feet eleven inches. The Representatives' hall is located at the eastern end of the building and the Senate Chamber at the west end.

Leading off from each hall are the retiring rooms of the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House, and a reception room for each, and offices and file rooms for the clerks of the respective bodies. Between the two halls are more than a dozen committee rooms, and a general committee room to be used where joint committees sit to hear testimony or argument.

The old center building, in which the recent session was held, is the third permanent Statehouse of Kentucky, and within its walls all General Assembly sessions have been held since Dec. 7, 1829, except during the political troubles of 1900, when, for several days, the Legislature was on the run from place to place to preserve the records from the Taylor soldiery. Six different appropriations were made to complete this building, the sum total of them being only $85,000, and convict labor was employed in sawing out the stone used in its construction. The Executive building, standing to the right of the old capitol, was projected in 1869 and completed in 1872, at a cost of about $155,000.

To the west of the old capitol stands the little "red" building, part of the second permanent capitol of the State, erected in 1814-16. The main portion of this structure was destroyed by fire on Nov. 24, 1824. The second permanent capitol, composed of three buildings, was erected at a cost of $40,000, half of which was realized by individual subscription of citizens of the Commonwealth.

The following is a short history of Kentucky's capitols and the facts of the first location:

In April, 1792, a convention assembled at Danville and prepared a Constitution and on June 4, 1792, the territory known as West Fincastle county, Virginia, was admitted into the Union as a sovereign State, the Commonwealth of Kentucky, with Lexington as the temporary seat of government. Immediately thereafter the first session of the General Assembly was held in Lexington and a commission appointed to receive proposals for and fix the permanent location of the seat of government.

After several meetings this Board of Commissioners on December 5, 1792, decided that Frankfort was "the most proper place for the seat of government." Later the Legislature approved this action of the commission.

Frankfort citizens gave three thousand dollars in money, ground to build upon and thirty lots to sell; ten boxes of glass 10x12 (a valuable asset in those days), 1,500 pounds of nails, fifty pounds' worth of locks and hinges and all necessary timber to build the State House. All this but the three thousand dollars was given by Andrew Holmes, of Frankfort.

The first Statehouse (temporary) was a two-story log house in Lexington, and the second one (temporary) was a frame house in Frankfort, known as the Love Mansion. The third Statehouse and the first permanent one was a three-story stone building on the present Statehouse site, and was occupied first in 1794. It was destroyed by fire in 1813. The fourth Statehouse was a building rented temporarily in Frankfort. The fifth one, and second permanent one, was completed in 1816 on the site of the burned one. It burned in 1824, and for the sixth Statehouse (again temporary) a seminary and church building were both rented. In 1829 the present stone Statehouse (the seventh) was completed, and has been so used to this good hour. In 1860 an appropriation of $100,000 was made by the Legislature to begin the building of a magnificent new Statehouse, and work was at once begun on the three-story stone building now occupied by the Governor, Auditor, Treasurer and other State officers, and known as the "Executive Building." This building, which was intended to be one wing of the proposed new building, has never been entirely completed, although an additional appropriation of $55,000 was made for it in 1871.

"Once a Kentuckian, Always a Kentuckian."

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 12.—No proof is required to establish the truth of the saying: "Once a Kentuckian, always a Kentuckian," for it is undisputed. And in saying this the question is not raised whether a like State pride—the same love of home—does not animate the sons and daughters of other States. Breathes there a man with soul so dead, Who never to himself hath said, This is my own, my native land?

This is a sentiment world wide indeed in its application. Examples, however, are interesting that illustrate the intensity of both the Kentuckian's love for his home and his partiality for his people, and while emphasizing the truth of the old saying "Once a Kentuckian, always a Kentuckian"—they serve to show at once how universal and how ineradicable is this sentiment.

Whether Kentuckian to the manor born, Kentuckian by choice, Kentuckian by mere accident of birth, Kentuckian of distinguished or humble origin—Kentuckian whose parents came hither from foreign lands in sailing vessels or steamship, in cabin or steerage, and Kentuckians even by marriage, all alike are thrilled by praise of what Kentuckians have done well, and all alike feel as a wound any stain upon the name of Kentucky.

So it happens that just now "Home-coming" makes the wanderers in "foreign lands" turn aside from their more or less exacting pursuits and allow themselves the time in which to recall some incidents in the lives of their people, incidents that serve to illustrate the depth, beauty and enduring nature of that sentiment which has inspired the celebration in which all Kentuckians throughout the world will participate in spirit, if not in person.

To my mind one of the most striking illustrations of the Kentuckian's partiality for Kentuckians is found in the experience of Abraham Lincoln. At every stage of his varied and wonderful career, Lincoln's affinity for men or women of Kentucky blood was in evidence. He was born in Kentucky, but left his native heath as a mere youth, and before any strong personal ties could be formed. There was nothing in these early experiences to specially attach him to his native State, for his family was poor and their life was a struggle. Some of the Institutions of Kentucky became, later in life, hateful to him, and because of this he became more or less estranged from his State, and his State from him.

And yet, he was a Kentuckian in spirit and temperament—in his likes and dislikes. His political idol was a Kentuckian—Henry Clay, and of the few books he studied constantly one was a volume of Clay's speeches. His early friend in Springfield, and his lifelong friend afterward—Joshua Speed—was a Kentuckian. His ideal of a great lawyer and orator, according to Frederick Trevor Hill, was a Kentuckian—John C. Breckinridge. He had his several love affairs, but, like his great rival, Jefferson Davis, also a Kentuckian, he married a Kentucky girl. In his career as a lawyer he had, first and last, three law partners—Stuart, Logan, Herndon, the first two the peers of the best lawyers of the State, all of them Kentuckians. His political friends and aides, Ogiesby, the elder Richard Yates, John M. Palmer, O. H. Browning and Cullom—all of them were Kentuckians. His Judge Advocate General during his first term as President was Judge Joseph Holt, a Kentuckian, and his Attorney General during his second term, James Speed, was also a Kentuckian. Instances might be multiplied to show how strong was this affinity for Kentuckians. As proof, however, of his love for the great State that gave him birth what could be more convincing than his solicitude for Kentucky, his concern for and helpfulness to Kentuckians in the saddest and stormiest period of American history? In his debate with Douglas, in all of his historical political campaigns he was often chided for departing from what his rivals described as "Kentucky teachings," and while he always spoke his views on slavery plainly, thus illustrating a strong Kentucky trait, he never spoke of Kentucky save in terms of admiration and love.

And what was true of Lincoln was also true of that noble band of Kentuckians in Illinois, so conspicuous in the councils of the nation, upon the battle field and at the bar. Indeed, all this fair, fertile prairie was settled by Kentuckians, and here at the capital of Illinois the tastes of Kentuckians and Kentucky characteristics are everywhere in evidence. The style of architecture is that of Louisville forty years ago, and here now, as in Kentucky then, a hitching post and carriage block stand as mute sentinels before every home. The second and third generation of descendants from the pioneer stock, descendants born in Illinois, still proudly proclaim themselves Kentuckians. For this no one chides them; and why should they? Wipe out all records of the part Kentuckians performed in the wonderful achievements for Illinois and for the nation and you remove one of the brightest, if not the brightest page in the history of the Empire State of the West.

Lincoln, Ogiesby, Yates, Palmer, Browning, Stuart, Stephen Logan, McLean, Ewing, Jeptha Hardin (a brother of Ben Hardin), Vivian Edwards, Duncan, Carlin—these are only a few names that illumine the pages of Illinois history, but they are names to "conjure with." We shall not see them at the "Home-coming of Kentuckians" in the approaching June, but they will be present as Clay, the Breckinridges, Crittenden, Rouse, Fenton, Clark, Albert Sidney Johnson, Robert Anderson, Preston, Prentice, Harney, Amos Kendall, McDowell, Dudley and Breshear will be present, in your records and in our recollection of their great achievements, their services to country and humanity.

Give them a place in your "Temple of Fame," which, let us hope, will be, as the fruit of your "Home-coming of Kentuckians," a temple indeed, built beautiful and strong, and displaying in its niches and on its walls, images of God's last, greatest and noblest handiwork—Kentucky's most illustrious men and women—for as a still living representative Kentuckian, resident in Illinois, has well said in his ode to Kentucky—he was, besides Kentuckian, poet, theologian, orator and the most wholesome and inspiring essayist of our age and country—John Lancaster Spalding, Bishop of Peoria:

"Thou wantest but the poet to waft thy name
In rythmic numbers through the earth and sky,
Some bard divine, with strong, heroic arm,
To soar aloft, and utter deathless cry;
No muse has touched thy lips with sacred flame,
To bid the music flow which cannot die."

HERMAN JUSTI.

A LIST OF KENTUCKY'S GOVERNORS.

WITH the time not far distant when the great Commonwealth of Kentucky will place a new and magnificent Statehouse in commission, it is interesting to look back over the list of those who have served as Governors of Kentucky. The list is as follows:

Isaac Shelby, 1792; James Garrard, 1796, James Garrard, 1800; Christopher Greenup, 1804; Charles Scott, 1808; Isaac Shelby, 1812; George Madison, 1816 (died in office); Gabriel Slaughter, 1819; John Adair, 1820; Joseph Desha, 1824; Thomas Metcalfe, 1828; John Breathitt, 1832 (died in office); James T. Morehead, 1834; James Clarke, 1836 (died in office); Charles A. Wickliffe, 1839; Robert P. Letcher, 1840; William Owsley, 1844; John J. Crittenden, 1848 (resigned to become United States Attorney General); John L. Helm, 1850; Lazarus Powell, 1851; Charles S. Morehead, 1855; Beriah Magoffin, 1859; James F. Robinson, 1862-63; Thomas E. Bramlette, 1863-67; John L. Helm, 1867 (died in office); John W. Stevenson, 1867; Preston H. Leslie, 1871; James B. McCreary, 1875; Luke P. Blackburn, 1879; J. Proctor Knott, 1883; Simon B. Buckner, 1887; John Young Brown, 1891; William O. Bradley, 1895; William S. Taylor, December, 1899, to January 31, 1900; William Goebel, January 31, 1900, to February 4, 1900, the date of his death; J. C. W. Beckham, February 4, 1900, to 1903, and re-elected December 8, 1903, to December, 1907.

The SETTLEMENT of KENTUCKY

BY J. STODDARD JOHNSTON

PRIOR TO 1750 the territory now embraced within the boundary of Kentucky was without the habitation of a white man. A map of it at that time would be but a blank outline with nothing but the rivers and other topographical features. An unbroken forest covered its soil, save in that portion known as "The Barrens," where was a prairie embracing five or six thousand square miles in the cavernous region south of Louisville, about midway between the Ohio and the Tennessee line.

In the mountains there was an undergrowth of rhododendron, kalmia, azalia, spicewood and cane, according to the variations in soil adapted to the several growths. In the remaining portions of the State, other than prairie or mountain, there was cane, thickest and largest where the soil was richest, and in summer supplanted with pea vines and other rank vegetation. These conditions were not favorable for grass and except as to the coarser kinds, which grew in "The Barrens," with thick roots, capable of withstanding the effect of fires, it is not probable that the first settlers of Kentucky found much other grass, although some mention is made of clover and bluegrass by Filson, 1784, and Finlay, 1792.

Therefore, in picturing to ourselves the physical features of Kentucky before its settlement, it must be as a dense forest, save in the prairie region and exceptional openings. The only rifts, so to speak, in this luxuriant wilderness were the roads made by the buffalo in their periodical migrations from the North and their visitations to the salt licks to be found in various parts of the State. These buffalo traces, as they were called, were of great value to the early settlers, as they furnished broad, well-beaten tracks for travel, without the necessity of cutting a way through the cane. In fact, in several portions of the State, as from Drennon's Lick to the Blue Licks, especially that part from Frankfort eastward, they fixed the line of settlement and became the highways and forerunners of the turnpike and railroad, just, as later, the buffalo indicated the route of the Pacific railroad through the passes of the Rocky mountains. The paths made by the Indians in their annual hunting trips and war expeditions were less well defined from their custom of marching in single file to conceal their numbers, although the route by which they traveled from Ohio to North Carolina and Georgia was well marked and known as the "Warriors' Path." It extended from the mouth of the Scioto, and from one or two other points on the river, above and below, by converging lines to the mouth of Station Camp creek, just above Irvine, Estill county. The Cumberland mountains and their outlying ranges were known as the Ouasiota mountains, and the route from the Kentucky river, up Station Camp Creek to the high lands which form the divide between the Kentucky and Cumberland rivers, was known as the Ouasiota Pass. Thence, southward, the line of travel followed the high ground to a point near the Cumberland, whence it passed through Cumberland Gap, then called Cave Gap, from a cavern in the subcarboniferous limestone on the south side of the mountain. Early writers refer to this as the route of the Lake Indians to Georgia and the Carolinas. There were many other trails of less note in Kentucky, including one from the Falls of the Ohio southwest to Tennessee, but the Warriors' Path seems to have been the principal one, a kind of grand trunk line, north and south, which became the early emigrant route.

Thus, with Indian tribes in Ohio engaged in agriculture as well as the chase, the Shawnees, Delawares, Kickapoos and Miamis, and with the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws and Chickasaws occupied in similar pursuits in the territory now comprising Tennessee and the States to the southward, Kentucky lay asleep in an apparent primeval state, and yet with the remains of a prehistoric civilization buried beneath the forest and undergrowth, as a graveyard shunned of man. What a mystery enshrouds the history of the race which built these mounds and fortifications, and passed away from earth without other record to posterity as to who they were or when they left this goodly land to lapse into the solitude of the forest! What an endless theme of conjecture and romantic speculation, both as to the causes which led to the extinction or migration of such a large population and the nonoccupation of the territory by tribes on either side, animated, in all other respects, by acquisitiveness, fully alive to its value as a hunting ground and jealous of its occupation by others. Were the prehistoric moundbuilders, while peacefully pursuing agriculture in fancied security, swooped down upon by nomadic tribes from the North, as the Goths and Vandals overran Southern Europe, and exterminated by slaughter, or driven west into the fastnesses of the canons of the Colorado, New Mexico and Sonora, to perish as cliff dwellers, or were the aborigines found by the white men the descendants of the moundbuilders, and their conditions, merely changed by wars and internal dissensions? Various theories prevail, but the latter now preponderates.

The Settlement of America.

Before entering upon the details of the settlement of Kentucky it will be well to review briefly the events which preceded it and the condition of affairs upon the continent when it first attracted the attention of the white man. For a long time after the discovery of America by Columbus the Spaniards were the only people who gave any attention to the Western continent, and they devoted themselves mainly to the Caribbean Islands, Mexico and South America. Their chief quest was for gold, for which early search was made by the expeditions of DeSoto, who starting from Florida in 1539 reached the Mississippi at Memphis in 1541, and of Coronado, who reached the Missouri from the Pacific about the same time. Failing to discover the precious metals, the Spanish, save as to Florida, virtually abandoned claim to the territory north of it. Thus neglected, England secured possession of the Atlantic coast south of New Foundland to Florida, and France north of it, the English making their first permanent settlement at Jamestown in 1607, and the French founding Quebec in the following year. The Dutch established a colony at the mouth of the Hudson in 1611, but surrendered their claim to the English in 1664. The settlement at Plymouth was made in 1620, the Pilgrims having at the outset purposed to settle at the mouth of the Hudson. All that portion of the coast north of the site of New York City, including the coast of Massachusetts, then known as Northern Virginia, had been explored and mapped by Capt. John Smith, of Virginia, of Pocahontas fame, and it was through his report of its physical features that the Pilgrims selected it as the site of their colony.

The progress of settlement westward by the English was slow. The French stimulated by a thirst for trade, chiefly in furs, early penetrated the continent by the water line of the St. Lawrence and the lakes, discovering the Mississippi in 1673. In 1682, by La Salle's discovery of its mouth, France acquired the Louisiana territory, and building military and trading posts along the route from the site of New Orleans to Quebec, belted the British possessions and in time claimed all the land east of the Mississippi watered by streams heading in the Alleghanies. In the meantime the English had remained comparatively stationary, occupying but a narrow belt along the coast and devoting themselves to agriculture, with little apparent curiosity as to the nature of the interior country.

Early Explorations of Kentucky.

The first authentic exploration westward was made by Thomas Batts, in 1671, under authority of Capt. John Woods, from the present site of Petersburg, Va. His course was a little north of the dividing line between North Carolina and Virginia, latitude 36 degrees 30 minutes. Grave errors have been made by writers upon the early history of the West in regard to this expedition, some of them claiming that it reached the Ohio, and others the Mississippi. The fact is that but about thirty days were consumed in the work, and that it only reached the headwaters of the New river, the chief tributary of the Kanawha. The journal of the expedition is contained in "Documents Relative to the Colonial History of New York, page 193," from which I made a copy some years ago. From this and having passed over part of the route during the war, I am quite sure that the party did not go any further north than where the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroad crosses New river, about forty miles north of the boundary line mentioned. No result followed this expedition, beyond the confusion created in the minds of historical writers, and it was not until 1716 that the Blue Ridge was crossed, when Gov. Spottswood with a pleasure party, made his Golden Horseshoe expedition, and looked upon the Shenandoah valley, from the richness of which he named the river the Euphrates. His belief was that it emptied into the Northern Lakes.

The delay in the exploration and settlement of the West, until within comparatively so late a day, renders the result the more notable and gives to the founding of Kentucky and its rapid development special moment. The British colonies were based upon land grants, and the energies of the proprietors were directed to their settlement by thrifty colonists from the mother country. The civil wars of England and the religious persecutions which culminated in the battle of Culloden in 1746 started the tide of Scotch and Irish immigrants who were to play such an important part in the settlement of the West. Two great land companies were founded in 1748. One was the Ohio Land Company, which acquired the right of locating 500,000 acres of land between the Monongahela and Kanawha rivers and southward of the Ohio. At its head was Lawrence, the elder half-brother of George Washington. The latter was agent and a surveyor of this company when, but twenty-one, he was sent by Gov. Dinwiddie to Venango to warn the French to evacuate the territory south of the lakes, upon which they had encroached, and it was Christopher Gist, chief surveyor of the company, who acted as his guide. The other was the Loyal Land Company, which had acquired a grant of 800,000 acres to be located north of the line of 36 deg. 30 mins., the boundary line between Kentucky and Tennessee. Dr. Thos. Walker was employed as the chief surveyor of the company to examine the territory. With that in view, he left his home, near Charlottesville, Va., March 6, 1750, and came west with five companions. His route lay south along the east side of the Blue Ridge, which he crossed at Buford's Gap, and thence westward by what was afterward the emigrant trail to Cumberland Gap, through which he found a well-beaten road, with small trees at the summit marked with crosses. He passed the site of Middlesboro, down Yellow creek to the river which he named for the Duke of Cumberland, son of George II., striking it just above the present site of Pineville. Thence he went down the river on the south side until he reached a point four miles below the present site of Barbourville. Here he made a canoe and crossed the river on April 23. Thence he made a tour of inspection northward with two of his companions, leaving the three others, as he says in his journal, "to provide and salt some bear, build an house and plant some corn and peach stones." On the sixth day he returned, noting in his journal the topography of the land, its growth and the presence of coal, and on his return says: "The people I left had built an house 12x8, cleared and broke up some ground and planted some corn and peach stones. They had also killed several bears and cured the meat."

This was the first house built in Kentucky by white men of which we have record, and is entitled to be called the first settlement made in the State. It was, as stated, on the north side of the Cumberland, not far from its banks, and its location is further identified in the journal as follows: "3 Quarters of A mile below the House is a Pond in the low Ground of the River, a Quarter of a mile in length and 200 yards wide, much frequented by Fowl." This pond was afterward named by Daniel Boone Swan Pond, is put down on Mansell's and other maps and exists there yet. The site of the house can still be identified by the remains of the chimney and within the past few years a tomahawk and other relics were found near by. Investigation made by me several years ago developed the fact that it was occupied later by an early emigrant, and with some additions remained the residence of one Patrick Burk, of North Carolina, until 1835, when it was torn down and the logs removed and rebuilt as a stable. Thus has been rescued from oblivion one of the most interesting facts of Kentucky's early history in the identification of the site of this first house built within its limits twenty-five years before the erection of the one at Harrodsburg accredited as the first structure. It is also the first identification of the location of what was known as "Walker's Settlement." All of the maps, beginning with Pownall's, of 1755, have located it on Green river, nearly south of Louisville, while its actual position was nearly one hundred miles to the southeastward. I know of nothing more worthy of commemoration by the Legislature of Kentucky than this spot and the men who composed this expedition. The site of the first house erected within its boundary should be marked with a monument inscribed with the names of Dr. Walker and his companions.

From this point, Dr. Walker proceeded northwest to the Rockcastle river, near the junction of the Louisville and Nashville and the Kentucky Central railroads. He did not enter the Bluegrass region, as was once thought, but, turned toward the northeast, crossing the Kentucky, which he called Milley's river, as down on Pownall's map, at the mouth of Station Camp creek, thence to Red river and up its north fork to the Licking, which he named Frederick's river, after Frederick, Prince of Wales, son of George II. and father of George III. Crossing it near the site of West Liberty, Morgan county, he reached the Big Sandy river, which he called Louisa river, after a daughter of George II., near Paintsville, Johnson county. He crossed the divide to the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy, which he followed eastward to the Flat Top mountains in West Virginia, reaching the New river at the mouth of the Greenbriar. He then pursued substantially the route of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad eastward through Staunton to Charlottesville and his home, which he reached after an absence of four months and seven days. In his journey through Kentucky he met no living being, although seeing recent Indian signs. He did not return to Kentucky until 1779, when, as Commissioner on the part of Virginia, in conjunction with Daniel Smith, he ran the line between Virginia and North Carolina, of which the present line between Kentucky and Tennessee is a part.

In 1751 Christopher Gist, the surveyor and agent of the Ohio Company, came after a daughter of George II., near Paintsville, Johnson county. He crossed the divide to the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy, which he followed eastward to the Flat Top mountains in West Virginia, reaching the New river at the mouth of the Greenbriar. He then pursued substantially the route of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad eastward through Staunton to Charlottesville and his home, which he reached after an absence of four months and seven days. In his journey through Kentucky he met no living being, although seeing recent Indian signs. He did not return to Kentucky until 1779, when, as Commissioner on the part of Virginia, in conjunction with Daniel Smith, he ran the line between Virginia and North Carolina, of which the present line between Kentucky and Tennessee is a part.

In 1751 Christopher Gist, the surveyor and agent of the Ohio Company, came a white man to the interior of Kentucky is contained in the journal of Capt. James Smith, who in 1755 crossed the southwestern portion, but it is not invested with interest except as a chronological item. Several parties had also then and afterward passed down the Ohio, but as these have little connection with the exploration or settlement of Kentucky the details are omitted. Among them were James McBryde, 1774; Hancock Taylor, 1769, and George Croghan, 1765.

Daniel Boone and the First Surveyors.

Nearly twenty years had elapsed after the passage of Walker and Gist through Kentucky until Daniel Boone, a native of Bucks county, Pa., but then a pioneer settler on the Yadkin, made his first visit to Kentucky. He had heard of it through John Finlay, a hunter and trader, and in December, 1769, in company with Finlay and four others, William Stewart, Joseph Holden, James Mooney and William Cool, he started for Kentucky. Passing through Cumberland Gap, they made their way to Red river, a northern tributary of the Kentucky, and established a camp on a creek now in Clark county, to which they gave the name of Lulbegrud, by which it is now designated on the map. The name was taken from "Gulliver's Travels," a copy of which was in the possession of one of the party, and by the perusal of which they diverted themselves. It is an octavo edition of 1765, in two volumes, illustrated with copperplate engravings, and is now, in good state of preservation, in the library of Col. R. T. Durrett, of Louisville. From this camp they made hunting and exploring trips. Upon one of these Boone and Stewart were captured by a party of Indians, but after being with them seven days and allaying suspicion of any such purpose, made their escape. On returning to camp they found it dismantled and abandoned, and the fate of their late comrades was never known. Not long after this Stewart, while hunting, was killed, and Boone was thus left alone. He then changed his camp to the south side of Kentucky river, to what was afterward known as Station Camp, and from that as a base made explorations into what is now Madison and adjacent counties. During the spring of 1770 he was unexpectedly joined by his younger brother, Squire Boone, who had come in search of him. The two then hunted and explored together until, their ammunition being nearly exhausted, Squire Boone returned to North Carolina for a fresh supply, and made a successful trip. It was then that Daniel Boone extended his explorations to the Ohio and visited the best portions of the bluegrass region, the knowledge of which, thus gained, was so valuable a factor in his after career in Kentucky and in the promotion of its settlement. Upon their return to the Yadkin, in March, 1771, the report of their adventures and of the fertile country they found spread through North Carolina and Virginia, and soon proved effective in stimulating immigration. In 1770 Col. Knox with forty men, known as the "Long Hunters," visited that part of Kentucky south of the Kentucky river, and in 1771 Simon Kenton the country about Maysville, but the parties did not meet.

It was not, however, until 1773, twenty-three years after Dr. Walker's trip, that definite movements were made looking to actual settlements. The schemes of the land companies had been premature. Important adjustments of titles were necessary. The Seven Years French and Indian War had intervened, the French having disputed the English boundary as claimed by the latter under the treaty of Aix la Chapelle, 1748, and by the terms of the treaty of Paris, 1763, France had to surrender to England all of her possessions in Canada and her claims east of the Mississippi. The Indians had sided with France, and their bloody incursions had well-nigh driven the Virginia settlers beyond the Blue Ridge. It was not until 1768 that, by the treaty of Fort Stanwix, near the site of Rome, N. Y., with the Six Nations, Virginia was able to quiet the title to Kentucky. Meanwhile, the mutterings of the coming revolution were becoming louder and resistance to British taxation was openly threatened. But the time was becoming ripe for the great western movement. The speculative feeling which comes in cycles was on again. The quality of the land in the western part of Fincastle county, Virginia, which embraced Kentucky, was becoming known. A surveyor's office was opened and Virginia was already looking to rewarding with grants of this land the soldiers who had fought in the late war.

In 1773, while there was yet no permanent settlement in Kentucky, three parties, each on its own outlook, met at the mouth of the Kanawha. They were those of Capt. Thomas Bullitt, coming to the Falls of the Ohio; Hancock Taylor, the uncle of President Zachary Taylor, as deputy of William Preston, Surveyor of Fincastle county, and the three McAfee brothers, James, George and Robert, who went up the Kentucky river and surveyed many tracts of land. Capt. Bullitt landed at the present site of Louisville at the mouth of Beargrass creek, which then entered into the Ohio near the foot of Third street. Here he planted his jacob staff on the peninsula near the mouth, and ran a line southwardly practically along the present First street to Broadway, and thence westwardly until by a line running north to the Ohio it embraced a tract of 2,000 acres, known as the Connelly survey, included within the boundary of Louisville. Adjoining it to the west he laid off a similar tract known as the Warrendorf survey, which embraced Pontaine Ferry. He also located various warrants, surveyed other tracts in the vicinity and made the first plat of Louisville.

In the following year some of them returned, among them Hancock Taylor, who was wounded by the Indians at Drennon's Lick, and died near Richmond while being borne home by his comrades. Col. John Floyd, one of the most intrepid of the pioneers, a deputy surveyor also, who nine years later met the same fate, and James Douglas came on to Louisville, located large numbers of warrants and surveyed many thousand acres, passing eastward to the Bluegrass region similarly engaged. There were also two other parties of hunters and explorers under Captains James Harrod and Isaac Hite. It was then that the town of Harrodsburg was laid off, June 16, 1774. Four or five cabins were built and occupied and corn was planted. But the freedom from Indian attacks which admitted of this first house building since that of Dr. Walker, twenty-four years before, did not last long. For shortly afterward Daniel Boone, who with Michael Stoner had been sent by Gov. Dunmore to warn surveyors and prospectors of the approaching Indian war and to leave the territory, communicated the message to all whom he could reach and Kentucky was vacated, the Harrodsburg houses abandoned and the silence of the wilderness once more prevailed. Most of those who left rendezvoused at the mouth of the Kanawha and participated in the battle of Point Pleasant, October 10, 1774, in which the Indians under Chief Cornstalk were defeated by the Virginians under Col. Andrew Lewis. Among those who took part in this campaign were two young men who afterward became conspicuous in Kentucky history, Isaac Shelby and George Rogers Clark, both Captains, the first twenty-four and the second twenty-two years old.

The Transylvania Company.

The following spring witnessed an early movement into Kentucky. Richard Henderson and eight co-proprietors from North Carolina made a treaty at Watauga, in East Tennessee, with the Cherokee Indians, March 17, 1775, whereby they purchased for £10,000 all the territory lying between the Kentucky and the Cumberland rivers, an area of 17,000,000 acres. It was on this occasion that Oconistoto, the Dragging Canoe, one of the signers, remarked to Daniel Boone that he feared his white friends had bought "a bloody ground and it would be dark and hard to settle," referring to the fact that it had been so long the scene of bloody Indian wars. This gave rise to the common belief that the word Kentucky had that meaning. It is, however, an error, the name being derived from the Iroquois word "kantake," meaning a meadow or grassy land. It was applied by the Iroquois when, in the Seventeenth century, returning from war with the Chickasaws to the southward, they passed through the Green river section of the State, then a prairie, as previously explained.

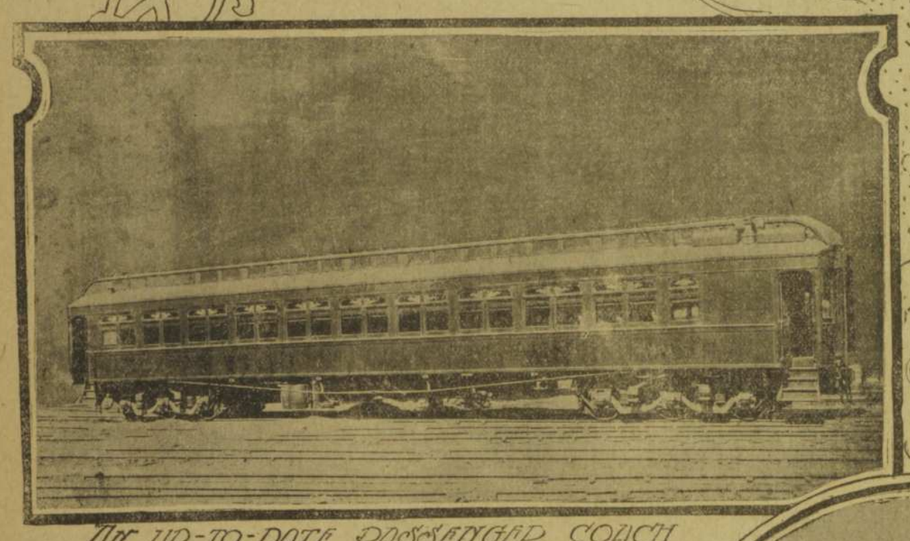

After the conclusion of the treaty the proprietors set out for their newly acquired possessions, preceded by Daniel Boone with a company, including all, of thirty-one men, to blaze the way through Cumberland Gap to the Kentucky river, upon the south bank of which they proposed to build a fort and form a colony. Boone reached his destination on the 22d of March, but not without the loss of several of his men from an Indian ambush several days previously. He at once set about building a fort at the mouth of Otter creek, in Madison county. Ten days after Boone left Watauga, Col. Henderson and his party followed, and on the 20th of April arrived, as he says, at "Fort Boone, at the mouth of Otter creek, Cantucky river, where we were saluted by a running volley of about

FIRST ENGINE USED IN KY.

A MODERN LOCOMOTIVE BUILT IN LOUISVILLE

IT IS a far cry from a steam engine of so little power that it had to be drawn up grades by horse power, which weighed but little more than an ordinary horse car and which, at best, could make but indieffrent progress, to a mammoth power machine of steel and iron, weighing over 183,000 pounds, with a tractive, or pulling, power of 25,000 or 35,000 tons and which can eat up the miles at the rate of one and better for every minute. Yet that, together with a corresponding development in other departments of railroading, is what has been accomplished in Kentucky in the years intervening between 1833, when the first locomotive was built in the State, to the present time when the L. and N. railroad is building locomotives to correspond with the latter specifications in its shops here in Louisville.

The development of the railroad industries is one of the big things in the history of the State. From the less than twenty-five miles of railroad track laid in 1838 between Lexington and Frankfort and the toy railroad that was operated there, Kentucky railroads have grown until, according to the report of the State Railroad Commission, there were 3,374.18 miles of railroad in the State, and railroad equipment that is well up to the front.

Louisville, which in 1838 had no railroads at all, has come to be one of the railroad centers of the country and the distributing point for the greater part of the entire South. Because of Kentucky's extensive system of waterways, the development of its railways was delayed more than in most States to the North and the East, but the day of the steamboat, so far as rapid freight and passenger transportation is concerned, is over. The floating palaces of a generation ago have given way to the palace car and the luxurious railroad trains of to-day.

The first engine built in Kentucky was for the Lexington and Frankfort railroad, and was constructed in Frankfort by a Mr. Bruen, who, at that time, had the only machine shop in the town. He first made a small model of his engine and placed it on exhibition in the dining-room of the old Weisiger Inn of that city, now the Capitol Hotel. It puffed up and down the miniature rails laid in the center of the long table in the dining-room and called forth terms of disapproval and predictions of failure from those who had assembled to witness the trial. That engine, in this day, would prove a most unsatisfactory toy. In the face of all the unfavorable criticism, however, an engine, called the "Daniel Boone," was constructed after the model and put to work on the road that was also built.

Blocks of stone, from four to six feet in length, and from a foot to six inches in width, were quarried and laid, end to end, in parallel rows to form the track. It was thought at first that the stone runways would prove durable, but experience taught that the grinding of the iron wheels on the stone surface soon wore the blocks into uselessness and were discarded. Cedar rails also were found to be impracticable unless faced with strips of iron. Later, the "T" rails, similar, but much lighter than those which now belt the continent, were adopted.

The first railroad to be built in Kentucky, the Lexington and Frankfort railroad, was the first one west of the Alleghany mountains, and the second one in the United States. In 1830, only twenty-three miles of railroad had been laid in the whole United States, and until the Kentucky road was built, the total trackage was not much greater. From Lexington, the toy engine and its train of pigmy cars ran down the grade to Frankfort in the very best style, but on the way back, it had to be drawn, the power being supplied by a stationary engine on the top of the hills and communicated to the engine by means of cables and many pulleys.

As the first locomotive that ever pulled a train in Kentucky was built in the State, so, at present, the best engines in use by the Louisville and Nashville railroad are being built in the State. Working along the theory that if a thing is to be well done it must be done by those most interested, the company concluded to build its own engines, as far as practicable. So the new shops of the company at First and P streets were built expressly for the making of locomotives.

The locomotive building department of the shops in Louisville is not the biggest part of the work although it is highly important. Thirty-five or more of the engines already in use by the company are put through the shops every month for repairs. Some of them do not demand much attention, but the largest number need to be rebuilt.

In the coach department, two passenger cars are built each month. These cars are built according to the most modern specifications and compare favorably with any of the general service cars used on the road. In addition to the building of the new cars, between twenty-five and thirty of those now in use are put through a general overhauling or repairing every month. Some of them have to be built up again from the trucks, much the same as engines that have been reduced to scrap iron, and that, too, means as much work as the entire construction of a new coach.

If anybody had predicted seventy years ago that that many years hence the question as to the regulation of the charges made by railroads for hauling produce would have come to be one of the most important of the age, he would have been set down as worse than simple. Kentucky in not a bit behind the other States of the Union in that matter. Its railroad rate problem is as tough a proposition as that faced by any other State, and as many columns of newspaper discussion are devoted to that question in Kentucky compared with the numbers of the newspapers as in any of the other States.

The Settlement of Kentucky.

twenty-five guns, all that were then at the fort."

Then ensued one of the most remarkable episodes ever enacted in the infant history of any country. Here was a land company from North Carolina, claiming, by purchase from nonresident Indians, a large domain, who, after building a fort to protect themselves, announced their exclusive right to the land, and that any settlers wishing any of it would have to purchase it from them. But there were others who took a different view. Benjamin Logan, from Augusta county, Va., who had taken part in the Dunmore war of 1774, and destined to play a conspicuous part in the history of Kentucky, had entered the territory with him, but declining to join in his scheme, had turned off at the Hazel Patch and made his settlement at St. Asaph's, one mile west of Stanford, the county seat of Lincoln county, where he built "Logan's Fort." Two of the McAfee brothers had returned to look after their surveys, made two years before, near Harrodsburg, and James Harrod, who had founded that place the year before, had returned with fifty men to reoccupy the improvements and take up more land. Lastly appeared Col. John Floyd, who had also been out the year before, with a company of thirty men, and encamped on Dick's river, within the Henderson lines, all in search of land and expecting to locate it under the authority of Virginia. Col. Henderson must have been a person of superior talents, for within less than a month after his arrival he had persuaded these gentlemen to unite with him in a plan of government by popular representation for his colony, to be named Transylvania. Accordingly on the 13th of May, 1775, delegates met at the fort, then named Boonesborough, "pleased," as Col. Henderson says in his journal, "with their stations and in great good humor." A convention was organized with all the details of a regular legislative body, with Thomas Slaughter as chairman and Matthew Jouett, clerk, to which Henderson sent an address in writing with the formality of the King's address from the throne, a written reply being made by Slaughter, and an answer returned by Henderson. Four days were pent in organizing the Government of Transylvania, bills were introduced establishing Courts of Justice and for the collection of debts, providing a militia system, one introduced by Daniel Boone to prevent the destruction of game, and upon various other subjects. The journal of this remarkable body, marked with all the technicality and precision of a legislative body of the present day, even to the several readings and engrossment of bills, is preserved, and attests, more strongly than any other evidence, the character and intelligence of these infant founders of Civil Government in Kentucky. For it must be borne in mind that the members were not merely the proprietors of the Transylvania Company from North Carolina, with a scheme prepared in advance, but were composed largely of the independent proprietors from Virginia, many of whom played conspicuous parts in the after events which led up to the foundation of the State.

George Rogers Clark.

In the autumn of 1775, a new leader appeared at Harrodsburg, who not only brought to the settlement his skill as a soldier, but pointed out the means of deliverance from the oppression of the land company. A protest was issued, arraigning the alleged titles of Henderson and his associates, and the Convention of Virginia was appealed to for relief from "the rigorous demands and imposition of the gentlemen styling themselves proprietors." In the following spring this was reinforced by a more specific petition, in which the importance of exercising her right of domain was urged upon Virginia, as against these usurpers, and of securing the allegiance and services, as riflemen in the Revolutionary War then pending, of the inhabitants of Kentucky, who were ready to lend their aid in vive them through the most critical period. Had the settlers been without the aid and co-operation of the company, it is doubtful whether they could have held out against the savages, and if menaced and driven back to Virginia and North Carolina, it is not probable that emigration would have been resumed until after the Revolutionary War.

The foothold thus obtained by this nucleus of settlement south of the Kentucky river and projected so far into the western frontier, had also an important bearing upon the Revolutionary War, then just well begun, forming, as it did, a strong link in the chain of defense which afterward was maintained during the war. When George Rogers Clark, whom John Randolph proclaimed the Hannibal of the West, made his settlement at the falls of the Ohio, in 1778, he established a strategic post of the most important character. It became the left of a long line afterward extended to Kaskaskia, the right of which was at Pittsburg, with the Kanawha and the interior Kentucky stations as intermediate strongholds. This line, though often assailed, particularly in Central Kentucky, was never broken. The true relation which the struggle that accompanied the settlement of Kentucky bore to the campaigns of Washington has been lost sight of by the historians. Philosophically viewed, it will be seen there were two lines of defense against British aggression, one facing eastward to repel Howe, Burgoyne, Cornwallis and Tarleton; the other facing westward, to drive back and hold in check the savage Indian tribes incited by the British to constant warfare upon the feeble, but courageous, line of riflemen who were carving out homes in the forest, at the same time they were protecting the rear of the Revolutionary army in the East. As early as 1755 the white settlements had extended down the Youghiogheny and the Monongahela nearly to the Ohio, but after the defeat of Braddock, with the flower of the British army, by the French and Indians, the frontier of white settlements was drawn back beyond the Alleghany, and with the exception of a few points beyond the Blue Ridge. What would have been the effect if a similar disaster had occurred on this western line of defense, held by Clark and his handful of hastily organized settlers? If, for instance, in 1778, when the British flag was displayed before Boonesborough by a force of 500 Indians, commanded by the Canadian, Du Quendre, the fierce siege had proved successful, what might not have been possible? The reduction of Harrodsburg and Logan's Station would have followed, and the way would have been open to Virginia. British reenforcements of Indians would have been pressed forward to the eastward, and the feeble line of the settlers, being thus broken, the line of defense might have been again driven back to the Blue Ridge, as in 1755, and the Revolutionary cause, then at a critical stage, might have succumbed to the force of superior numbers. What prevented it but the indomitable courage of the pioneers and the skill and courage of the leaders, each acting on his own resources, yet all co-operating toward a common end. In all the struggle it must be borne in mind, in order to realize the magnitude of the achievement, that there was practically no civil or military government with an executive head to direct operations, and yet the successive campaigns were conducted with marvelous skill and success.

Pioneer Women of Kentucky.

But to resume the narrative of the settlement of Kentucky. The summer of 1775 saw the several forts on the south side of the Kentucky in a miserable condition for resisting the attacks of the Indians. Up to this time no white woman had voluntarily set foot in Kentucky, the only record of the presence of any within its limits being that of Mrs. Ingles and a Dutch woman who were brought from Draper's Meadows, on the upper New river, in Virginia, to Big Bone lick as prisoners of the Shawnees in 1756, and, making their escape, returned to Virginia after untold hardships. In 1773 Daniel Boone, with his family and several others to the number of forty persons had started to move to Kentucky, but when in Powell's Valley, near Cumberland Gap, the caravan was attacked by Indians and six of the whites were killed, including Boone's eldest son. This deterred them from proceeding further and they fell back to the settlements on Clinch river and there remained two years awaiting a favorable opportunity to resume their journey. Homes having been prepared, Boone went for them and on the 8th of September, 1775, arrived at Boonesborough with his wife and daughter, who, as he said, "were the first white women who ever stood on the banks of the Kentucky river." On the same day Mrs. Hugh McGary, Mrs. Richard Hogan and Mrs. Thomas Denton arrived at Harrodsburg, being of the same party whom Boone had conveyed and who to the number of twenty-one had separated from him at the head of Dick's river. The next year Ben Logan brought his family to St. Asaph's, and there, with their wives and children to defend, all idea of retreat from their new homes was relinquished and the settlement of Kentucky had become an assured fact. What heroic memories cluster around the pioneer women of Kentucky, sharing with their husbands the dangers of the wilderness and contributing their full share to the building up of their homes, aiding in the defense of the stations even to the use of rifles, molding bullets, stanching wounds, encouraging their sons and husbands in heroic resistance to the savages, and in the preparation of land and the cultivation of the crops, spinning thread from nettles and weaving clothing from the hair of the buffalo! Amid all the trials and sacrifices of the pioneer days nothing stands out more conspicuously as a factor in the great work of civilization finally achieved than the heroism of our pioneer mothers.

Romance and Heroism of Pioneers.

And what a halo of romance lights up the early settlement of Kentucky! Where in all the realms of fiction can be found a more thrilling incident than the seizure of the daughters of Col. Callaway and Daniel Boone by the Indians, and their rapid deportation towards the Ohio; the pursuit by their agonized fathers and betrothed lovers and their rescue, unharmed, after a chase of thirty-six hours through the forests and canebrakes—the happy return to Boonesborough and the weddings which followed. Recall the heroism of Ben Logan, who left the security of the stockade at Logan's Fort and rescued his friend, Burr Harrison, who lay wounded within arrow shot of the savage foe; or of Reynolds at Blue Licks, who at the risk of his life saved that of Col. Patterson in flight after the dreadful carnage when enfeebled and afoot by placing him upon his horse and himself suffering capture. The whole story, from beginning to end, is one series of heroic deeds and romantic incidents, as worthy of an epic as the siege of Troy or the founding of Rome.

Nor must we forget what odds the pioneers had to contend with, and how nearly, at several junctures, they came to being obliterated. In 1777, after having struggled two years in defense of their homes, notwithstanding the accessions of newcomers in the meantime, that only three settlements proved permanent, Boonesborough with twenty-two, Harrodsburg with sixty-five, and St. Asaph's, or Logan's Fort, with fifteen men. Nor would they have been able to hold out but for the powder which George Rogers Clark and Gabriel Jones had succeeded in securing from the Virginia Council, the singular history of which deserves notice. After much difficulty in getting it the s, they left Pittsburg with 500 pounds, which they took safely down the Ohio to Maysville. Not being able to transport it overland, they buried it on an island in the Ohio, and started to Harrodsburg. On their way they met Col. John Todd, who afterwards fell at Blue Licks, with a small company, and Jones went back with him to secure the powder, while Clark kept on to Harrodsburg. Unfortunately, the party was attacked by Indians, and Jones was killed. On the 20 of January, 1778, James Harrod raised a company of thirty men, and proceeding to Maysville, they found the powder and conveyed it safely to Harrodsburg. This enabled Boonesborough to hold out the following summer against the formidable attack of Du Quendre on the 4th of July, and furnished a supply for the defense of the other stations.

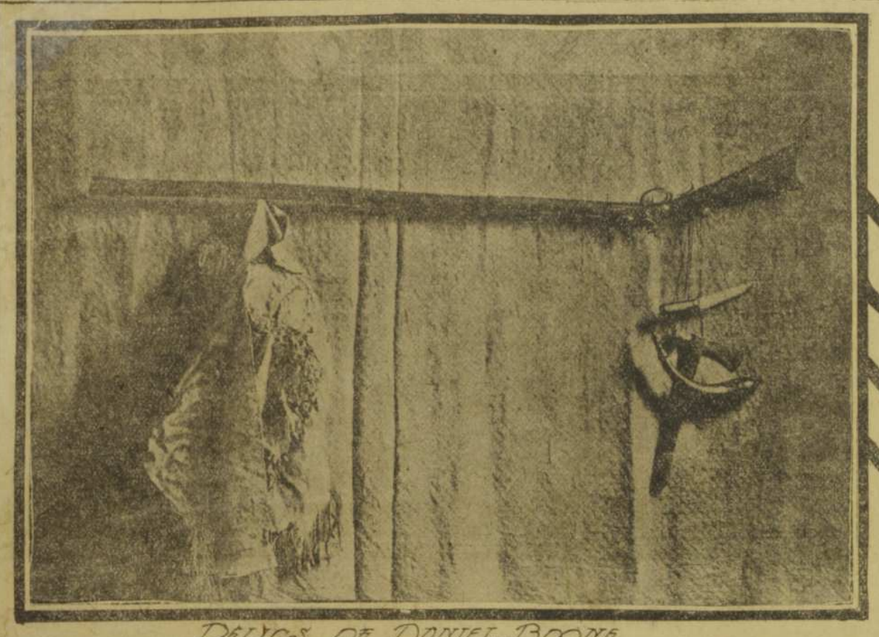

In the summer of 1778 the settlements were deprived of Clark's presence in the State, as he was absent on his Illinois expedition, laying the foundation of a security greater than any they had ever dreamed of. When, in 1780, Col. Byrd, a British officer, invaded Kentucky with 600 Canadians and Indians and six pieces of artillery, capturing Ruddle's Mills and Martin's Station, near the present site of Paris, and retreating thereafter, there was witnessed strategy equal to any shown elsewhere in the Revolutionary War. Gen. Clark caused Col. Logan, with about 500 men from his own and neighboring forts, and Col. Linn from the Falls, to rendezvous at the mouth of the Licking, and thence with the combined forces he invaded Ohio, burning the Indian towns, destroying their crops and carrying such consternation to their homes that Kentucky settlements were not troubled with similar invasion for two years. Then in 1782 came the siege of Bryan's station, founded five years after Boonesborough, and the bloody massacre at Blue Licks. Again Clark repeated his campaign of 1780. Ben Logan and John Floyd rendezvouing at the mouth of the Licking with 1,000 men, and carrying such destruction into the valley of the Miami that no invasion by the Indians in a large body was ever after made into Kentucky. The conception of these campaigns, as well as the strategic theory observed by Clark in the meanwhile, will compare favorably in military skill with the plans of any commander in this or any other country. Clark, at the Falls, held the left flank and was yet in position to re-enforce Logan at the center if necessary, or by speedy concentration on short lines, as demonstrated, to strike the enemy in his most vital part.

I shall not undertake to give in detail the settlements which followed those already cited. The story of one is the story of all. Gradually the line extended until from Maysville to Lexington and from Boonesborough to Louisville there was a cordon of posts and stations. The Green river country, never the scene of much invasion, was settled later. But the trials of the Kentucky settlers did not cease with the close of the Revolutionary War. Much pioneer blood was spilled after its close. The Blue Licks massacre followed one year after Yorktown. Col. John Floyd fell in 1783, and Col. William Christian four years later. Peace came to the Eastern States practically with the surrender of Cornwallis, while to Kentucky the war which began with the battle of Point Pleasant did not end until Wayne's victory, the battle of Fallen Timbers, August 20, 1794—twenty years of continuous fighting—resumed at Tippecanoe in 1811, and not finally terminated until the battle of New Orleans in 1815. By such a sacrifice of heroic blood and such heroic struggle was the settlement of Kentucky achieved, the history of its civil government developing the same qualities of self-reliance, original thought and independent action, coupled with a statesmanship not second to that which characterized the Eastern founders of the Republic.

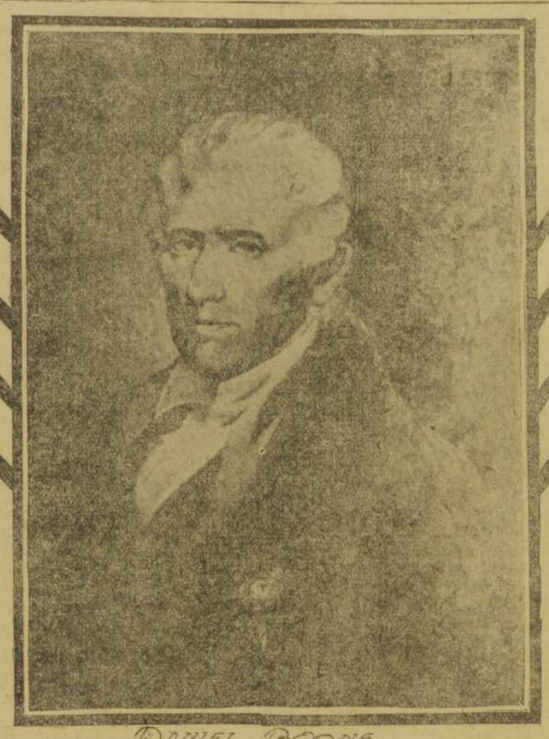

In looking back upon the history which I have endeavored in such brief space to epitomize, what a grand catalogue of figures adorn the military and civic Pantheon of Kentucky with Clark as the central figure, second only to Washington in the results achieved by him, and next to him Ben Logan, a man who knew no fear, an officer of ability and resource, a sagacious legislator, the two forming a typical combination of effective leadership in Kentucky's history! Save as to Boone—to whom all bow in reverence—to extend the list would entail an embarrassment in the sequence when none can successfully challenge the right of those named here to head the list. Let us cherish their memories, preserve the record of their deeds and encourage the youth of Kentucky to emulate their virtues.

DANIEL BOONE, THE FIRST OF THE PIONEER KENTUCKIANS

DANIEL BOONE, the first Kentuckian, was also the first home-coming Kentuckian, and established the precedent which is to be followed this June by thousands of the children of the State he was so largely instrumental in giving to the Union. On May 1, 1769, he set out from Holman's Ford, on the Yadkin, in North Carolina, spent almost three years in the wilds of what is now Eastern Kentucky, then retraced his steps to North Carolina, determined to bring his family. On September 25, 1773, the families of Daniel Boone and his brother, Squire Boone, left North Carolina again for Kentucky, but were beset by Indians, and six of the party, including a son of James Boone, the pioneer, were killed. The expedition turned back and, for a time, homes were found on Clinch river, in Virginia. For seven months the pioneer resisted the call of the wild until Gov. Dunmore, of Virginia, sent the surveying expedition to Kentucky and "solicited him to go to the falls of the Ohio and conduct into the settlement a number of surveyors that had been sent thither by him some months before—this country having about this time drawn the attention of many adventurers." Men of such names as Taylor, Bullitt, Harrod, McAfee, names famous in the annals of Kentucky, were those whom Boone was sent to relieve. His duty was performed satisfactorily to the court of Virginia, and Boone was assigned to a military command.

As Boone had been selected by Lord Dunmore to guide his best surveyors through the wilderness, his sagacity and skill were recognized in a new trust, and he was chiefly relied upon to secure possession of the territory bought by the Transylvania Company. The plan under which the company operated was conceived in North Carolina by Richard Henderson, William Johnston, Nathaniel Hart, John Luttrel, David Hart, John Williams, James Hogg and Leonard Henley Bullock, more famed Kentucky names. So, in the spring of 1775, Boone came home again to Kentucky. After many delays the party constructed a fort on the left bank of the Kentucky river, which was named Fort Boone, and which later became Boonesboro. He returned for his wife and family, and some of his neighbors joining the expedition, he brought his people home to Kentucky.

Kentucky was admitted to the Union February 4, 1792, and in the survey of the territory previous to that time the title to Boone's land was decided against him. Stung to the quick by the wrong, he visited his birthplace in 1796, and later made himself a home at Point Pleasant, between the Ohio and the Great Kanawha, but in 1795 he made the fourth great pilgrimage of his life and removed to Missouri, then a Spanish possession, and received not only the appointment of commandant of the Femme Osage district, but a grant of 8,000 acres. The lands passed into the hands of Napoleon, and in the survey that followed his sale of them to the United States the Spanish title was declared invalid and, for the second time, Boone was bereft of his lands. An appeal to the Legislature of Kentucky had another to Congress resulted, in the seventy-fifth year of his age, of a grant of 850 acres to him. On the 26th day of September, 1820, in the eighty-sixth year of his age, Daniel Boone, the first Kentuckian, and the first Kentuckian to move west to Missouri, died and was buried beside his wife, who had preceded him to the grave. His last home-coming was on September 13, 1845, when by the concurrent action of the citizens of Frankfort and the State Legislature, his body and that of his wife were exhumed and brought to Kentucky to be buried in the State he had made.

Daniel Boone was the son of Squire Boone, and was born while the father's home was near Bristol, on the right bank of the Delaware, about twenty miles from Philadelphia, on February 11, 1735. His grandfather, George Boone, had come from Devonshire, England, eighteen years before. The boy Daniel was one of a large family, as his father had been before him. Three years the junior of George Washington, his destiny in the formation of a country for the future development of free institutions had kindred features.

When the young pioneer was three years of age his father moved the family from Bristol to Reading, in Berks county, then merely a frontier settlement. It was while resident there that the boy got his first instruction in woodcraft and developed his love for the woods. His education from books was not of the most complete of that day. "Grammar and orthography were not his household deities." In after years, when he had occasion to write, he expressed his meaning, going roughshod over the conventions. The "three R's" were explained to him in an elementary fashion. He is said to have neglected his books for the chase, and tradition has it that, at a very early age, he was recognized as one of the best hunters of that locality.

When young Boone was eighteen years of age the father determined upon a second pilgrimage and at length settled near the South Yadkin, in North Carolina. There he grew to manhood and there he won the affections of Miss Rebecca Bryan. He went out from the house of his father and built him a cabin of his own, supporting himself and his bride by the proceeds of his hunting and by the fruits of the farm. John Finley, who among others had made an extended hunting trip, came back to the settlements telling wonderful things of the land that lay to the west of the mountain ridge. Boone heard the stories with intense interest, and, as the days passed he came to believe himself, as he is often quoted, "an instrument ordained to settle the wilderness."

Shorn of all details, which Boone, like most of the great men of all times, neglected to supply in the telling of his story, Filson tells the story as it came to him from the pioneer's own lips:

"It was on the first of May in the year 1769, that I resigned my domestic happiness for a time and left my family and my peaceful habitation on the Yadkin river, in North Carolina, to wander through the wilderness of America in quest of the country called Kentucky, in company with John Finley, John Stewart, Joseph Holden, James Monay and William Cool. We proceeded successfully and, after a long and fatiguing journey through a mountainous wilderness, in a westward direction, on the seventh day of June following, we found ourselves on Red river, where John Finley had formerly been trading with the Indians, and from the top of an eminence, saw with pleasure the beautiful level of Kentucky.

"In this forest—the habitation of beasts of every kind natural to America—we practiced hunting with great success until the 22d day of December following. This day John Stewart and I had a pleasing ramble, but fortune changed the scene in the close of it. We had passed through a great forest on which stood myriads of trees, some gay with blossoms, others rich with fruits. Nature was here a series of wonders and a fund of delight. Here she displayed her ingenuity and industry in a variety of fruits and flowers elegantly shaped and charmingly flavored; and we were diverted with numerous animals presenting themselves perpetually to our view. In the decline of the day, near Kentucky river, as we ascended the brow of a small hill, a number of Indians rushed out of a thick cane brake upon us and made us prisoners. The time of our sorrow was now arrived, and the scene fully opened. The Indians plundered us of what we had and kept us in confinement seven days, treating us with common savage usage.

"During this time we discovered no uneasiness, or desire to escape, which made them less suspicious of us; but in the dead of night, as we lay in a thick canbrake by a large fire, when sleep locked up their senses, my situation not disposing me for rest, I touched my companion and gently awoke him. We improved this favorable opportunity and departed, leaving them to take their rest, and speedily directed our course toward our old camp, but found it plundered and the company dispersed and gone home. About this time my brother, Squire Boone, with another adventurer, who came to explore the country shortly after us, was wandering through the forest, determined to find me if possible, and accidentally found our camp. Notwithstanding the unfortunate circumstances of our company and our dangerous situation, as surrounded with hostile savages, our meeting so in the wilderness made us reciprocally sensible of the utmost satisfaction. Soon after this my companion in captivity, John Stewart, was killed by the savages, and the man who came with my brother returned home by himself. We were then in a dangerous, helpless situation, exposed daily to perils and death amongst the savages and wild beasts—not a white man in the country but ourselves.

"On the first of May, 1770, my brother returned home to the settlement by himself, for a new recruit of horses and ammunition, leaving me by myself, without bread, without salt or sugar, without company of my fellow creatures or even a horse or dog."

For three months he was thus alone. From the time of his brother's return until the next spring the hunters continued to explore the country, giving names in their progress to the different rivers, and in March, 1771, returned to North Carolina, determined to bring their families to Kentucky as soon as possible. It has been shown how the families of Squire and Daniel Boone were compelled to turn back and settle for a time in Virginia. After that came Boone's services with the surveyors who made the expedition to the falls of the Ohio and his connection with the Transylvania Company.

His part in the defense of Fort Boone, when it was attacked by DuQuesne and his horde of Indian allies, is, or ought to be, common knowledge to Kentuckians. He was prominent in the insincere parleys that preceded the assault, and, standing on one of the bastions of the defenses, defied the enemy.

"We are determined to defend the fort while a man is living. We laugh at all your formidable preparations, but thank you for giving us notice and time to provide for our defense. Your efforts will not prevail, for our gates shall forever deny you admittance."

No sooner had Boone returned to Boonesboro after he had gone back to North Carolina for his wife, than his adventures and perils were renewed. On October 6, 1870, he and his brother, Edward, with whom he had been through many hardships, made an expedition to the Blue Licks, probably for the purpose of seeking a supply of salt. They had reached the Blue Licks in safety and were on their return, when the Indians discovered them and they were fired upon by a party in ambush. The fire was fatal to Edward Boone, and Daniel Boone, was obliged to leave the body of his brother to be mistreated and mutilated, while he made his escape. That winter was one of the hardest in the annals of the early days of Kentucky, but it saw many immigrants come to the settlements, and in the following year many more came West. For the next year Daniel Boone remained at Boonesboro.

He bore a large part in the wars with the Indians that filled the few years that followed—wars that gave Kentucky the name of the "dark and bloody ground." Many tales of hairbreadth escapes and terrible struggles are told of Boone of those days. The increasing number of settlers at Boonesboro and the vicinity crowded him too much for his comfort and he moved across the river, to a point five miles to the northwest of Boonesboro, in what is now Fayette county. He inherited that tract from his brother, Israel Boone, who had died a short time before. It is said to have stood on the land at the junction of Boone's creek, and Boffman's creek and was immediately given the title, "Boone's Station." That was his headquarters for the next eight years or more until he was deprived of the land by a decision of the courts.

He spent some time at Point Pleasant before going to Missouri, where, as has been shown, he was given official recognition and a grant of 8,000 acres of Missouri land. Boone was reduced and impoverished when he left Kentucky, by being deprived of his property and by the expenses of litigation, which, even in that day, were not inconsiderable. He took his rifle to Missouri and hunted long and far. The forests were full of game, and until age impaired his vision, he hunted with a boldness kindred to the spirit of the days when he dared remain 500 miles away from the homes of white men. He was disturbed often by the Indians, but so thoroughly offered resistance that the savage found that old age had not crushed the soldier of Boonesboro.

He maintained his residence in the Femme Osage country through the possession of the territory by France, and remained there until the land was acquired by the Union in 1803. He was successful as a hunter, and obtained a quantity of furs, so the story goes, to enable him to pay the debts that he still owed in Kentucky. He saw every creditor and paid every cent, and returned to Missouri with only half a dollar in his purse. In the seventy-fourth year of his age he was again caught in the meshes of the law, and his title to his land in Missouri was declared invalid. Friends interested themselves in his behalf, and through the action of Congress and the Legislature of Kentucky, Boone was awarded a plot of 850 acres, scarcely anything in that day.

He was visited in his frontier home by many men, among them Harding, the portrait painter, whose picture of Boone is said to be the only authentic one in existence. He died September 26, 1820, in the eighty-sixth year of his life, which had been extended long enough for him to witness the great Commonwealth that had resulted from his earlier labors and privations.

"It seems to have been characteristic of his remarkable career," says Bogart, in his life of the pioneer, "that when the perils and the responsibilities of the scene concentrated, and collected upon one, he was there to sustain them, and when the most dangerous hour was over and the excitement of greater numbers was experienced, he stepped aside from the place of power and sought to conceal himself rather than obtrude."

In person Daniel Boone was five feet and ten inches in height, clean limbed and of athletic form. His endurance was surpassed by no other man of his time. His eyes were a mild and clear blue, but are said to have glowed black in times of excitement. His forehead was high and noble, his lips thin and compressed, and his chin one denoting power and determination. Truth, simplicity and kindness were the keystones of his character.

BEN HARDIN, EMINENT AS STATESMAN AND LAWYER

By JOHN McCHORD.

KENTUCKY has been appropriately called the offspring of Virginia, the birthplace of those statesmen and soldiers who contributed so largely to the formation of our Republic. The home of Thomas Jefferson, Richard Henry Lee, Patrick Henry, and that mighty host of patriots and statesmen, who, actuated alone by love and loyalty to their country, fostered the spirit of true patriotism among the early colonists that culminated in the Declaration of Independence, and ultimately the success of American arms in the War of the Revolution. No section of country on earth has contributed a race of people possessed of the same degree of bravery, patriotism and loyalty as has Virginia.

After the battles of the Revolution had been fought, and the independence of our country had been attained, the sons and daughters of the bold pioneers of Virginia pushed over the Alleghany mountains into the wilderness, the "dark and bloody ground," now our own beloved State, Kentucky. They came not as did the bloodthirsty Spaniard under the leadership of Cortez, who descended upon the quiet and peaceful Montezuma, whose country's civilization was destroyed and its inhabitants thrust into slavery, but, true to the memory and traditions of the Scotch-Irish and Huguenot blood that counted in their veins, they sought to extend the bounds of our great Republic, by the upbuilding of homes, the introduction of civilized methods, and the rearing of families, in that section where the cruelty of the savage had never before been stayed. They endured untold hardships, fought the inhospitable savage with bravery that has never been excelled, conquered the wilderness, and Virginia has never ceased to point with pride to Kentucky as the handiwork of its own sons and daughters.

No Virginia family has contributed more to the fame and prestige of Kentucky than the Hardins, and no member of that illustrious family has shed greater luster upon the name than has "Ben Hardin," as he was familiarly known. He was eminently a statesman and a lawyer. He was one of that old line of statesmen and orators that has long since passed away, though the impress of his intellect has been cast upon his grandchildren and great grandchildren, who are famous in Kentucky to-day as lawyers, doctors and divines.

Ben Hardin was a grandson of Martin Hardin, a Huguenot, who fled from his country after the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and settled in Fauquier county, Virginia. His grandson, Martin, had several children—three sons, John, Martin and Mark, and four daughters, Sarah, Lydia, Mary and Rosannah. The subject of this sketch was a son of Sarah Hardin and Benjamin Hardin, Sr. They were cousins, and both natives of Virginia. Between the years 1785 and 1790 the entire family of Martin Hardin removed to Kentucky, and all but Rosannah settled in the same neighborhood near Springfield, now the county seat of Washington county. Mary, the eldest, married Robert Wickliffe, Lydia married Charles Wickliffe and bore four sons and five daughters. Of the former the most distinguished was Robert Wickliffe, of Lexington, and Charles A. Wickliffe, of Bardstown. Charles A. Wickliffe was distinguished as a statesman, lawyer and soldier. He fought with distinguished bravery as aid to Gen. Caldwell at the battle of the Thames, returned to his home and became a member of the Legislature in 1820 and 1821; was elected to Congress in 1823, and continued a member of Congress by successive re-elections until 1833; was a member of the Legislature in 1838, 1834 and 1835, and was elected Speaker in 1834; was elected Lieutenant Governor in 1836 over Elijah Hise. He became Governor of the State in 1839, was appointed Postmaster General in 1839, and was a member of the constitutional convention of 1850. He was the grandfather of our present Governor, the Hon. J. C. W. Beckham. It will thus be seen that Ben Hardin and Charles A. Wickliffe were first cousins, and both were most eminent lawyers. They were rarely on the same side in a case. They attended together the same country school under the tutelage of the old time, sturdy Scotch-Irish teachers, for which Washington and Nelson counties were famous in those early days; both being for many years pupils under the grandfather of Gov. J. Proctor Knott, who taught a school on Cherry Run, now in Marion county. They opposed each other when boys in their debating societies, and in after years were opponents in politics, and as lawyers were opponents in some of the most important and exciting cases in the courts.

BEN HARDIN.

BEN HARDIN'S TOMB

In addition to being the most distinguished lawyer of his day, Ben Hardin held many important offices. He was a member of the Legislature, Commonwealth's Attorney and a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1850 and a member of Congress for three consecutive terms. He and Charles A. Wickliffe being members from Nelson county. There was great difference in the natures of these intellectual giants, although they were first cousins. Gov. Wickliffe was a man of commanding personal appearance, over six feet tall, well proportioned, with raven black hair, when in his prime, having a smoothly shaven, classical face, of polished and graceful manners, as kind and gentle as a woman and scrupulously neat in his dress. Ben Hardin, his distinguished cousin, though a man of splendid physique, was wholly neglectful of his personal appearance. It is said by those who knew him intimately that he was a regular attendant upon the Marion Circuit Court. At the summer term of court he invariably wore a suit of old-fashioned home-made "tow linen." The coat extended below his knees, a few inches above the tops of his stitch-down shoes that were rarely tied. He invariably came to court on horseback and was loth to encumber himself with a change of raiment. Thus attired, he went from court to court, taking a leading part in every case of importance on file.

His influence before juries was remarkable. In speaking of his style as an orator, Gov. J. P. Knott said: "He had a lame hand, which he invariably held behind him when speaking. He would begin his address in a plain, conversational style, standing erect with one foot slightly in advance of the other. He would, in a style peculiar to himself, get the attention of his auditors, entertaining them by matchless flights of eloquence, touching subjects somewhat foreign to the questions at issue, when, at the right moment, his appearance would become animated, and he would come to the climax like a whirlwind that would carry everything before him. He would then, by his matchless use of language, interspersed with anecdotes, carry his hearers with him to other subjects, and again approach the strong points of his subject with added zeal and power that rarely failed to carry conviction and applause."

The Governor said that one of the most remarkable speeches Ben Hardin ever made was before the Marion Circuit Court in a lawsuit involving $35. One George Grant was the proud owner of a Newfoundland dog, "Shilo." His neighbor, Styles Maxwell, lost some valuable sheep that had been killed by dogs. Suspicion rested upon "Shilo" as the leader in the slaughter. Maxwell called upon Grant and asked the privilege of examining "Shilo." The examination resulted in finding wool in his teeth. Maxwell had his squirrel rifle with him, and upon the refusal of the owner to permit the dog to be killed, shot the dog between his master's knees. Maxwell was sued for $35 in damages.

Ben Hardin came to court on his usual rounds, and was employed by Maxwell to make a speech in his behalf before the jury at an agreed fee of $5. Pacing the court room whilst the evidence was being introduced, he apparently gave the case little attention. He closed the argument before the jury. Beginning his address just after the noon hour, he spoke until 6 p. m., when court adjourned. He resumed the next morning, consuming the entire day. Soon after he began his speech, it became noised abroad that "Ben Hardin" was making a great speech. On the second day of his speech the court room was crowded to overflowing. His hearers listened to him with rapt attention throughout. It is needless to say that the jury returned a verdict for his client. It is said that some of his finest efforts were put forth where the amount involved was trivial.

One of the most noted cases that Mr. Hardin ever engaged in was what is known as "The Wilkinson Case." Edward Wilkinson was a young lawyer, a resident of the State of Mississippi. He had held the position of Circuit Judge and other important positions in his State. He was engaged to be married to a young lady in Bardstown, Ky. The wedding was to have occurred in December, 1838. He was accompanied to Kentucky, in advance of the wedding, by his brother, Dr. Wilkinson, and his friend, Mr. Murdaugh, a young lawyer. They stopped at the Galt House in Louisville, where Judge Wilkinson desired to make some preparation for the coming wedding. He had engaged one Redding, a tailor, to make his wedding suit. Upon examination of the suit at Redding's place of business, some objection was made to the fit by Judge Wilkinson, which angered Redding, and a difficulty occurred, which was for the time being quieted. Redding, having summoned his friends, repaired to the Galt House, where they attacked Judge Wilkinson, his brother, Dr. Wilkinson and Mr. Murdaugh. In the melee the Mississippians used bowie knives on their assailants, with the result that Redding and one Meeks lost their lives.

Public sentiment in Louisville ran high against the Wilkinson party. The friends of Redding immediately sent a messenger to Bardstown, forty miles distant, and engaged Ben Hardin to prosecute. An examining trial of great excitement was had, and the Wilkinsons and Murdaugh were held for further trial. All three were subsequently indicted for murder, and an act of the Legislature was passed granting them a change of venue from Jefferson to Mercer county. The case was called for trial at Harrodsburg, March 4, 1839, and on that date the trial began. The prosecution was represented by Edward I. Bullock, Commonwealth's Attorney, and Ben Hardin. Pitted against them for the defense was John Rowan, Col. Robinson, Samuel Davis, John B. Thompson, Charles M. Cunningham, James Taylor, C. W. Wickliffe and the celebrated orator, S. S. Prentiss, of Mississippi.

Great interest was manifested in the trial, which consumed five days. The principal arguments made before the jury were by S. S. Prentiss, for the defense, and Ben Hardin, for the prosecution. It is said by those who heard the trial and the arguments of Prentiss and Hardin that it was indeed a battle of intellectual giants. All eyes were centered on these men. A biographer says that "during the adjournment of court, and even the night preceding his address, Prentiss had been at the card table and indulging in deep dissipation. On the contrary, all his odds and ends of time Mr. Hardin devoted to laborious research and preparation. His speech occupied parts of two days. He slept none the intervening night (as one describes it), through the long hours 'like a Coripheus he worked with the facts and law of his case, consulting authorities and arranging his matter, leaving his address alone for the sure inspiration of the moment.'"

Judge Little, describing this remarkable trial, said: "With the mass of those who heard the trial, the speech of Prentiss undoubtedly bore the palm. Yet the late Dr. John C. Young, the accomplished president of Centre College, was present, and not a few would prefer his discriminating judgment to the thoughtless plaudits of the multitude. He said that 'Prentiss furnished the tinsel, while Hardin supplied the bullion of the argument.' Shields, the biographer of Prentiss, characterized the speech as Hardin's greatest effort. Rowan spoke of it as being 'as remarkable for vigor of intellect as for vehemence and impassioned zeal.'"

The jury acquitted the defendants. Public sentiment during the trial was greatly in favor of the accused. Mr. Hardin was not accorded the same hospitality by the citizens of Harrodsburg during the trial as was extended to the distinguished counsel representing the defense. He keenly felt the slight. It is said that, on the morning after the trial he mounted his horse to return to his home, and reining up in front of the tavern, and addressing himself to some distinguished citizens of Harrodsburg, he said: "I will see that John Helm and Dr. Palmer run a stake and rider fence between here and Danville." Dr. Palmer and John M. Helm were sons-in-law of Mr. Hardin, and were members of the Legislature from Hardin and Washington counties respectively. In performance of that threat, the Legislature shortly thereafter carved the County of Boyle out of the heart of Mercer County.

For pathos and sarcasm his "Owsley Speech" has been rarely, if at all, excelled. Commenting upon this speech, the late Governor Stephenson said, "For power, interest, sarcasm and originality, it was unequaled since the days of Edmund Burk. Never have I heard a speech whose popular effect was more overwhelming."

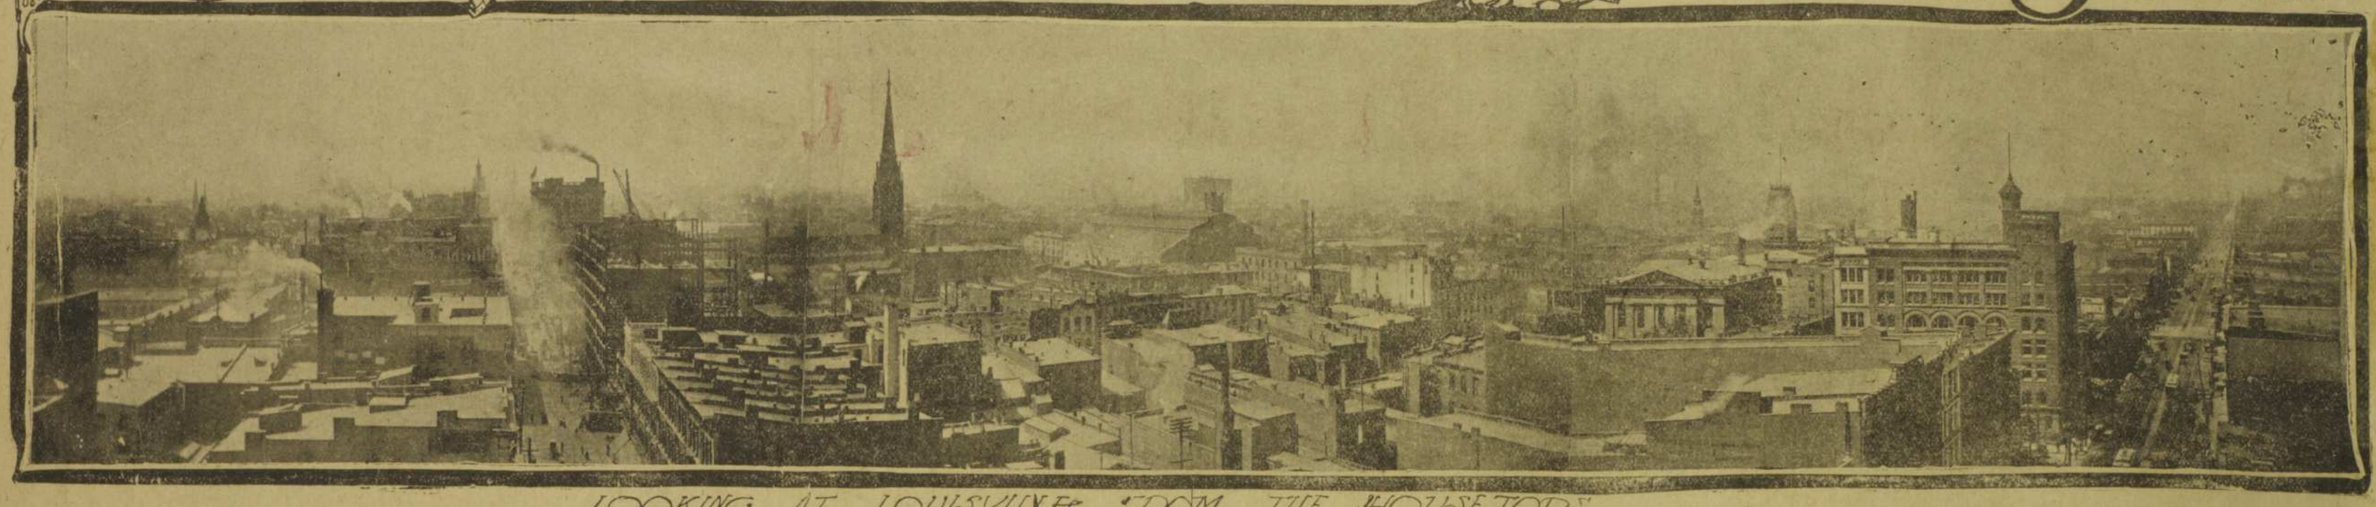

In 1844 Governor William Owsley commissioned Ben Hardin as Secretary of State. Shortly thereafter the Governor contracted a deadly hatred for his Secretary of State, and attempted by an executive order to deprive him of his office, and appointed George B. Kinkead of Versailles to fill the supposed vacancy. On the assembling of the Legislature, the name of Mr. Kinkead was submitted to the Senate by the Governor for confirmation. Mr. Hardin protested against his confirmation. Upon the protest, a committee of the Senate was appointed to inquire into the question as to whether the office of Secretary of State was vacated by the order of removal made by the Governor. After an exhaustive investigation and hearing, the committee reported that there was no vacancy.

Mr. Hardin continued the active practice of the law until a short time before his death. He never abandoned his custom of horseback riding, which, for half a century, he had engaged in, traveling from court to court in different parts of the State. In attempting to latch the gate leading from the avenue of his son-in-law, Dr. Palmer, and in sight of the spot where he was born, he fell from his horse, fracturing his thigh. From this injury he never recovered. Even in old age his mental vigor never waned, and to the date of his unfortunate accident he continued to be perhaps the most versatile lawyer that Kentucky had ever claimed as its own. It is said that, a short time before his death, he called his children and grandchildren around his bedside, and at his request, his daughter read from the forty-seventh chapter of Genesis: "And the time drew nigh that Israel must die; and he called his son Joseph and said unto him, 'If now I have found grace in thy sight, put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh, and deal kindly and truly with me; bury me not I pray thee in Egypt, but I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying place. And he said, I will do as thou has said. And he said, swear unto me. And he swore unto him. And Israel bowed himself upon the bed's head.'"

After the reading had ended, he addressed himself to those around him, and said, "Lay your hands under my thigh, and promise me that you will bury my remains by the side of those of my mother and father, in the old burying ground in Washington county, in the land where my childhood was spent." They said, "We promise." This promise thus made, was fulfilled. About two miles from Springfield, 300 yards from the turnpike leading from Springfield to Lebanon, can be observed a plain marble shaft. Carved upon it is the simple inscription, "Ben Hardin, of Bardstown." Beneath this shaft thus located, in a barren and neglected field, and on the spot where his mother and father settled and built their home in the wilderness, in 1788, rests the remains of Ben Hardin. By the side of his grave can be observed two depressions in the earth, the only evidences of the existence of the graves of his mother and father.

The accompanying picture of Ben Hardin was copied from a large photograph of him in the possession of Gov. Knott, which was copied from a crayon by the celebrated artist, Jewitt. This crayon was discovered by Gov. Knott by the merest accident. Whilst he was Governor of this State he was invited to Danville to take part in an anniversary. There were on exhibition by the ladies of Danville many old and rare articles of different kinds, including portraits of priceless value. This crayon was on exhibition. It had been sent in by an old resident, who seemed not to know the author or the subject. Gov. Knott, who is himself an artist, immediately recognized in it a most splendid picture of Ben Hardin, whom he knew and admired. He had it copied, and the accompanying is a reproduction of this picture, which is said to be the only good picture of him in existence.

LOOKING AT LOUISVILLE FROM THE HOUSETOPS.

LOUISVILLE, 1906.

Greater Louisville in the near future by all the tokens of prosperity, by virtue of unique shipping facilities by rail and river, by natural location in the heart of a great mining section, whose mineral wealth is beyond compare, destined to be a manufacturing center of great magnitude and the gateway to the South.

Such an outlook greets the thousands of Kentucky's sons who have returned to their native soil after years perhaps of absence. They see this city and its possibilities through time's perspective and get a view of things which only a few of those in intimate touch with the city's life have dared to prophesy.

A Backward Glance.

Many of our citizens remember when the proprietor of a Main-street wholesale house might have been seen seated on a box in front of his store whittling a piece of pine wood, most probably, if the weather were pleasant, in shirt sleeves. It has also not been such a great while since our wholesale grocery houses had stacks of produce in front, and kept a man on the outside whose business it was to buy and sell chickens, eggs, butter, vegetables, or most anything the farmer brought to market. That time has passed.

Main street of to-day is a most commercial thoroughfare, where drays and delivery wagons crowd upon each other and the hum of business is in the air.

As a wholesale, jobbing and commission-house center Louisville is growing, steadily and surely; 1905 saw nearly a 25 per cent. increase in most business lines over the preceding year.

The Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, to whom much of the credit for Louisville's material prosperity is due, sent out about 25,000 invitations last year to customers urging them to come to this city to buy, and offering to pay railroad fares. These invitations went to twenty-two States, and fares have been paid from States as far east as New York.

Louisville is to-day a $500,000,000 city. The figures may sound large, but test them by the volume of business done and they are under rather than over the mark. The record of bank clearings last year was $602,316,722. In 1904 it was $558,000,000; the year previous $529,000,000, and in 1902, $501,000,000. The first month this year showed an increase in clearings over the corresponding month of last year of nearly $10,000,000. Put an estimate say of $133,000,000, on the output of manufacturing, and you have over one-fourth of the total business of the city. The census statistics of 1900 gave the value of our factory output as $78,746,000, and if the ablest local statisticians have kept the records correctly the capital invested in manufactures has in the five years succeeding increased thirty-five million dollars, and the value of products, based on the same percentage to capital invested, has expanded fifty-five million.

These figures may sound startling, but they are founded on the most reliable statistics available.

* * *

Industrial Increase.

There are 230 more factories in Louisville than there were five years ago, an average yearly gain of forty-six, and the total number of wage-earners employed is 40,000, a normal increase since the census for 1900.

It is not out of place to add that a very large per cent. of these wage-earners—a larger per cent. than in most cities—are property owners, having acquired their own homes. The feeling of pride which the ownership has engendered is manifested in the neatly kept cottages that are found in the outlying sections of the city.

It is a notable fact that Louisville factories as a whole have larger earning power in proportion to the capital invested than most other cities in the country. Cheapness of fuel and ready access to raw materials by reason of excellent transportation facilities will explain this fact. The freedom from labor agitations is worthy of mention, for not since the universal strike of 1877 has there been an important labor disturbance here.

Where there are so many thriving industries, it is impossible to touch upon the subject of manufacturing except in the most general way. There is located here the largest wagon factory in the world, a concern which turns out seventeen wagons every hour in the day. Among the city's industries are numbered one of the largest plow factories in the United States and a flour mill which produces 1,600 barrels a day, and is kept running the full twenty-four hours. There were shipped in 1904 433,000 barrels of whisky, which, estimated at $89 per barrel, amount in value to $34,640,000.

The soap manufactured in Louisville in a year reduced to cakes weighing six ounces, each cake being four inches long, if placed in a straight line, would encircle the earth once and a half times, or equal the owned and controlled mileage of four great railway systems—the Louisville and Nashville, Southern Pacific, Southern railway and the New York Central.

* * *

As a Manufacturing Center.

Louisville ranks well as a manufacturing center for agricultural implements. One firm in this city is reported to manufacture one-tenth of the 300,000 farm wagons sold in this country each year. The annual shipment of farming implements amounts to 54,000,000 pounds; there are produced in this output $2,000,000 worth of plows alone. The annual production in stoves amounts to about 35,000,000 pounds. The yearly shipment of woodenware is 50,000,000 pounds, one-half of which is of local manufacture.

Louisville is the largest sole leather market in the United States and probably in the world. Tanning was one of the earliest industries established and as a result shoe building and harness making have flourished.

In the output of packing house products Louisville takes a high position, doing an annual business of about $20,000,000 and packing 400,000 hogs and 25,000 cattle.

This city is the center of the jeans clothing business of the United States and about 15,000,000 pounds more woolen goods are shipped out than are received each year.

In the line of plumbing supplies a business of $2,000,000 is done and in plaster, lime and cement about $5,000,000 annually is done.

As a flour market Louisville takes high rank and an average of 3,000 barrels per day are shipped to other points.

It is not a well-known fact that this city contains a large establishment for the manufacture of motors, dynamos and electrical machinery, but such is the case, the plant having grown from a most modest beginning to one of the largest in the country.

* * *

As a Tobacco Market.

As a tobacco market Louisville stands supreme, probably dividing honors with the city of Liverpool alone. Numerous complications have entered into the tobacco market in recent years due to the method of doing business of the American Tobacco Company or the "Trust," but Louisville has probably suffered as a market as little as any other city and still maintains her supremacy. Roughly estimated the sales on the local "breaks" since 1850 have amounted to about four and a quarter billion pounds of leaf tobacco for which there was received in excess of three hundred million dollars. In recent years the average value of the sales on the "breaks" has been about $12,000,000. In the last fifty-six years about three and one-half million hogsheads have been sold in this market.

Kentucky tobacco is now shipped out of this metropolis to all parts of the globe. Nome, Alaska, takes her quota. The fishermen on the banks of Newfoundland uses the Kentucky product; the Falkland Islands, the Cape Verde Islands, the Canary Islands, the ports of the Gulf of Guinea, North Africa, South Africa, East and West Africa, Tasmania, New Zealand, Guam, France, Italy, Spain, England, Hungary, the Desert of Arabia, Algeria, Japan, in fact all the world gets Kentucky tobacco in some form or other.

In the manufacturing of tobacco this city ranks second to St. Louis and manufactures about 10 per cent. of the total product, which is in the neighborhood of 350,000,000 pounds. Nearly 50,000,000 cigars are annually made in local establishments.

It is no easy task to make an approximate estimate of the volume of wholesale and commission business done in Louisville in the course of a year.

The best way of forming an idea of the volume of business, and it is only an idea, is to take the figures of those who are conversant with commercial affairs and whose business it is to know. In the lines of dry goods, groceries, produce, millinery, iron and hardware, whisky, boots and shoes, drugs, and tobacco sold on the breaks, one authority figures that $75,000,000 is done in a year. This is exclusive of manufacturing, of course, and in one or two instances it may be an overestimate. With miscellaneous lines added the total would be swelled considerably. It is manifestly impossible to form an accurate estimate of the wholesale cigar and tobacco business, as contradistinguished from the manufacturing branch, for the two are inseparably interwoven, and the same is true with reference to whisky.

Shipments of Whisky.

In estimating the whisky shipments from Louisville the Board of Trade uses 400 pounds per barrel as a basis, and assuming that so many cases represent a barrel it keeps no record of the number shipped other than as stated. Its statistics for the first nine months of 1905 show that there were shipped from Louisville 321,955 barrels, as against 292,345 for the same period last year, an increase of 10 per cent. for this year. The same ratio would bring the total shipments up to about 430,000 barrels for the year, but it actually exceeded 467,000. Estimating this number of barrels to contain forty gallons each, the whisky shipped during 1905 mounted to 18,680,000 gallons, and the total business reached the neighborhood of $40,000,000 for the twelve months. It is difficult to form an idea of the wholesale business by itself, as merchants are in many instances distillers. An estimate of

The magnitude of the whisky trade as a whole can be better appreciated when it is known that it represents in gallons approximately 15 per cent. of the total business, including alcohol and all sorts of spirits for all purposes, in the United States. It probably amounts to a much larger percentage in dollars, as the average price and quality of whisky shipped from this market are higher than from any other. Few branches of industry in Louisville have shown such a wonderful increase within twenty-five years as has whisky, the business during that period having grown about 500 per cent., while the growth for the whole country for the same time would probably not exceed the percentage of increase in population. This is partly due to location and the good name of the Kentucky product; partly as the result of integrity and enterprise of the merchants engaged in this line of trade. They early recognized the necessity of employing good salesmen and sending them over all the United States, and this policy has been more extensively carried out as its beneficial results became apparent. Throughout the country Louisville is better known as a good whisky market than for any other one commodity.

Of late years the large whisky merchants of Louisville have been both manufacturers and merchants. For a long period they were content to be merchants alone, but some short-sighted distillers insisted that the wholesale dealers should sell their products on a basis which would give the manufacturers practically all the benefit to be derived from the middleman's energy and advertising. The combination of the two branches of the trade makes Louisville dealers better prepared to meet the demands of their customers.

Volume of Business.

One of the wholesale grocers estimates the total volume of business done in his line at from $7,500,000 to $8,000,000, exclusive of produce. This would make an average of about $442,000 for each of the seventeen large grocery establishments in a year. Freight rates count for a great deal in this line, and the territory Louisville has drawn from, in consequence, is somewhat circumscribed. The margins of profit are small, but the business is steadily growing, and merchants are doing better than holding their own. Several of the jobbers in the past two years have added a manufacturing line, and are able to put up some goods of their own make, which is binding the business to the city more than ever before.

The healthfulness of the local wholesale trade is reflected also in the retail part of the business, in which there are one thousand merchants and firms engaged, and failures are comparatively rare, although many engaged therein had little capital save their credit and energy.

Improvement in recent years has been noted in the dry goods trade, and Louisville merchants are now forging ahead rather rapidly, whereas a while back they were marking time. The three houses carrying considerable lines of dry goods and notions have placed the market on a basis which makes it compare favorably with any in the West. Louisville has always been a good staple center, but there was formerly not the selection of dress goods, cloaks, dress trimmings and novelty wares that is now to be had, though some improvement along this line is still possible. Merchants from the South, after careful comparison of Louisville and other markets, find it advantageous to do their business here. It is estimated that the wholesale dry goods trade has increased within the past eighteen months at least $1,500,000, which is probably not far out of the way.

Louisville's proportion of business is large, considering the convenience of the larger markets of Cincinnati and St. Louis, and much credit, therefore, should be given to the commercial bodies for their exploitation of Louisville as a market, and to the local wholesaler for his treatment of his customers.

The wholesale drug business of Louisville amounts to about $1,800,000 per year. The figures do not embrace returns from collateral lines, which druggists are accustomed to handle. Louisville has always been an excellent drug market. Two of the oldest houses in the country are located here. Their continued success through so many years is an indication of the fair dealing which has built up the business. One of the wholesale drug establishments is the second oldest in the United States, having been established in 1817, and another began business in the early forties. The facilities for gathering such stock as needed are unexcelled; also those for distribution. Drugs are sold from this market throughout the entire South, and the business is growing.

Patent Medicine Mart.

Louisville also has become quite a manufacturing center for the allied lines—proprietary and patent medicines. Many of the best-known and most widely-advertised articles of this kind have their home in this city, and are largely distributed through the wholesale drug houses here.

Louisville leads in a number of lines that we hear little of. This city is recognized as the largest bottle market in the United States, the output of a number of large factories being sold through local houses. It is also claimed that Louisville is the leading market of the country for table glassware. Goods in this particular line that are distributed by the local jobbing trade represents a larger volume in dollars and cents than similar business in any other city of the country. As a paint and varnish center, Louisville ranks as one of the largest producers, shipping goods to many distant points and supplying the biggest consumers in the country. The grades of mirrors sold here have a reputation second to none, and the business has in recent years assumed large proportions. Louisville has an excellent reputation in various sections of the United States as a plate and window-glass market, and the volume of trade in the several lines mentioned in this paragraph has trebled in the past ten years, until to-day it amounts to approximately $7,000,000. In stoves a very large business is done, and Louisville stove concerns are much of the time several weeks behind with their orders. Leather, grain, cement, lime and plaster also contribute a considerable amount to the aggregate volume of trade.

One of the first millinery houses to introduce trimmed, or pattern hats, is located in Louisville. Every large millinery house in the country has its trimming-rooms and manufacturing departments to-day. The three houses in Louisville do a business which ranges from $1,000,000 to $1,200,000 a year.

* * *

Commission Business.

The commission merchants who handle produce, such as eggs, butter, poultry, vegetables, etc., do a business estimated at about $3,000,000 per annum. Supplies are drawn from Kentucky, Tennessee and Indiana. While a great deal of produce is shipped from here to Eastern markets, a large part of that which is received is consumed locally. As a distributing market for the markets of the East, Louisville is on equal terms with Chicago, and has a decided advantage over Kansas City and St. Louis, these points taking a higher freight rate. The business is growing and the outlook is favorable.

Then, there are hides, skins, furs and wool, and many other lines that might be mentioned. It is not generally known, but Louisville has a firm, and the only firm, by the way, which has maintained its name in the city directory since 1845, and has dealt in pretty much the same line of goods in all those years—furs, wool and hides.

There are some lines in which the wholesale business of the city might be increased, as, for instance, men's shoes of the finer quality, men's fine clothing (a great variety of the cheaper grades are manufactured), and a fine line of cloaks. These things will come in time, and with more push and hustle than ever before the market should continue to broaden.

"When we look around," wrote the editor of Jegle's Directory of Louisville in the year 1845, "and behold the great number of buildings being erected, cotton bagging and rope factories, white lead works, steamboats and public buildings springing up as if by magic, we may justly anticipate that the Queen City of the Rivers will yet be the second city in the Union."

At that time Louisville was gaining at the rate of 100 per cent. in population every ten years, and cities like Cleveland and Chicago had populations of 17,000 and 30,000, respectively. A daily stage line was then the means of communication between Louisville and Nashville, and things were otherwise primitive and crude, as compared with present-day methods.

While the growth of the city has not kept pace with the optimism of the writer of half a century ago, and some other cities have overtaken and outstripped Louisville in that time, the man who feels a pride in the Falls City of to-day can be thankful that her business has grown steadily, notwithstanding some adverse influences of the past.

Real Estate Increase.

The assessable value of real estate has increased 25 per cent. in five years, but as the Assessor's returns only represent 70 or 75 per cent. of the actual value, the real estate valuation is in the neighborhood of $120,000,000, to which should be added $30,000,000 which is exempt from taxation. A like computation of personal property comes to about $55,000,000. Add to this a low estimate of property on which taxation is evaded, and the sum is considerable in excess of $200,000,000.

The rise in real estate values has not been due to speculation, but to the real enhancement of value, due to the city's prosperity. Purchasers of property in the heart of the city ten years ago have realized 100 per cent. profit on their investment.

For an illustration, take what has been known as the Hegan property. It was purchased about twelve years ago for about $75,000, and since that time probably as much as $15,000 has been spent for improvements. A short time ago this property was sold for $1,500 per front foot, and as it has a frontage of 199 feet, this would bring the total selling price up to $285,000 dollars. The published price at the time the deal was consummated was $210,000.

As another example, take the lot at Fourth and Market streets, which sold after much lively competition for the sum of $120,000. This property has a frontage on Market street of thirty-five feet and on Fourth avenue of seventy-five feet. Calculating from the Market-street frontage the ground brought $3,429 per front foot, the price paid being equal to $36 per square foot.

A tentative offer made for the old Masonic Temple site at Fourth and Jefferson is equivalent to the same price, $36 per square foot, but the latter site is vacant property, while the other was not. The price paid for the Masonic property by the present owners was $275,000. After paying $10,000 as the cost of wrecking the building, following the big fire, they had deft out of the insurance money collected the sum of $55,000, which reduces the cost of the site to $220,000. An offer of $380,000 has been made for this lot and also the tentative offer of $420,000 referred to, the owners stating to all would-be purchasers that the property is not for sale.

Growth In Building.

The growth in building has been little short of phenomenal. At the present writing the Carnegie Library, the Seelbach addition and five immense office buildings—one of which will include a great theater—are in process of construction. Add to these the apartment houses that have been built and the auditorium that is soon to be begun and one has some of the larger evidences of the city's building, but make a trip to the suburbs in any direction and still greater evidences of the city's growth and prosperity will be seen, for from one viewpoint the writer counted over thirty small houses for residence use in process of being built, and was informed that nearly all of these were being built for the owner to live in.

Building statistics for several years indicate the rise of a greater Louisville. The Building Inspector estimates that the figures really lack 40 per cent. of the true cost of construction and repair. The figures for five years are:

1902	3,959,829
1903	2,586,436
1904	3,878,457
1905	4,506,382

A conservative estimate for 1906 is 2,000,000

From 1898 to 1904, inclusive, there were erected one hundred and twenty-four warehouses, costing $844,698; one hundred and six factories, costing $1,279,470; three hundred and fifteen stores, $1,523,913, and forty-six churches, $433,285. The figures are subject to the increase of 40 per cent. previously referred to.

Louisville is beginning to be noted for its architecture and Third avenue is often favorably commented upon by strangers as ranking in beauty with Euclid avenue, Cleveland and "Unter Den Linden," Berlin.

The brokerage business in Louisville has undergone a considerable change with the passing of the years. To-day a stock exchange is in full operation and the city has greatly improved as a market for securities, especially street railway stocks and bonds.

It is only since 1890 that special interurban and eight State banks, including two savings banks, and four trust companies, with banking facilities here. The value of the stock of the various banks range from 98 to 370, while that of the trust companies ranges from 130 to 370. The bankers of the city are broadminded and liberal, and ready to aid in every possible way every legitimate business enterprise. Scandals and instances of mismanagement have been comparatively rare.

Bank clearings indicate to a considerable degree the volume of business which a city does. The Louisville Clearinghouse was organized November 24, 1875, and began its operations January 3, 1876. Its career has been honorable and its influence salutary. Since 1876 clearings have increased from $107,349,171 to $602,316,722 in 1905, which is a gain of 461 per cent. The clearings of 1906 exceeded those of the previous year $44,153,024.

Another evidence of growth is the increase in population. The census of 1900 gave 204,731 as the number of inhabitants of Louisville, since which time it is estimated that there has been an increase of 35,849, making a total population of 240,580. This estimate is made on the basis of the number of names in the city directory of the present year, using the figure two as a multiplier, which is extremely conservative. Another factor is the character of the population. This can be estimated from the census figures, which showed 166,314 inhabitants ten years of age and over, of which 89,959 were engaged in gainful occupations, or 53.6 per cent., a percentage greater than shown for Indianapolis, Chicago, Baltimore, Detroit, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Jersey City, Rochester, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Allegheny, Milwaukee and numerous other cities. Of the inhabitants over ten years of age 80,346 were males, 66,017 being engaged in gainful occupations, or 82.2 per cent. The number of illiterates was placed at 1,263 and there were 18,844 colored or negro males and 20,279 females. The figures show conclusively that the populace of Louisville are a people of fair intelligence, and also a busy people.

Transportation Facilities.

A great advantage to the city as a distributing point is her excellent transportation facilities. Ten great railroad systems, with numerous branches and connections, afford every needful traffic outlet that the river, with its reasonable boat rates, does not furnish.

Take the shipments for five years and you will marvel at the growth shown. Here are a few illustrations: Hardware increased 108 p er cent., flour, 80 per cent., dry goods and notions, 79 per cent., leather, 13½ per cent., stoves, 43 per cent., tobacco manufactures, 19 per cent., wagons, 19 per cent., whisky, 41 per cent., wooden ware, 38 per cent., wool, 19 per cent., woolen goods, 23 per cent., agricultural implements, 76 per cent. and drugs, 69 per cent.

Six interurban lines center here—others are projected—bringing the people of the surrounding country, and of New Albany and Jeffersonville, to Louisville to do their shopping, and retail stores of modern type supply their wants.

An evidence of prosperity is seen in the remarkable growth of the street railway system, the gross earnings of which have increased $562,819, or 37 per cent., in four years. Another evidence is the fact that the Louisville and Nashville Railroad Company is building shops here at a cost of $5,000,000, and the way in which the various railroad companies have striven to increase their terminal facilities in recent years clearly proves the foresight of their officers.

An Inevitable Question—Why?

All this inevitably leads to a question—Why?

The answers, for there are many, may be briefly and generally summarized as follows:

Louisville is the gateway to the South.

Louisville is the leading city of a State even richer in agricultural and mineral wealth than in history.

Louisville has the facilities afforded by great railroad systems, and the Ohio river, with its thirty-three navigable tributaries, connecting with the Gulf of Mexico.

Louisville can offer cheap fuel and desirable factory sites, with exemption from taxation for five years to manufacturers.

Louisville has the largest banking capital in the South.

Louisville has unsurpassed educational institutions, numerous churches and beautiful parks.

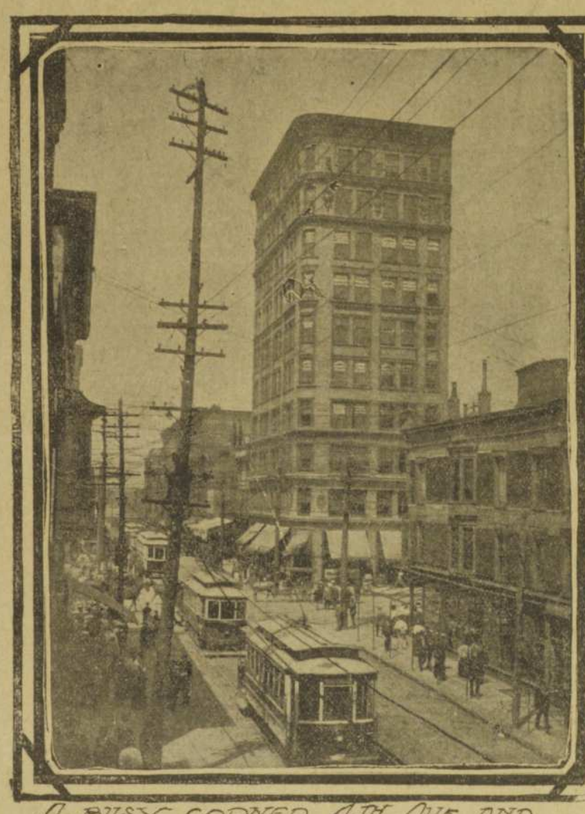

Louisville has newspapers to make her advantages known to the world, and that do credit to the city.

Louisville has a mild, healthful climate and the records show a very low death rate.

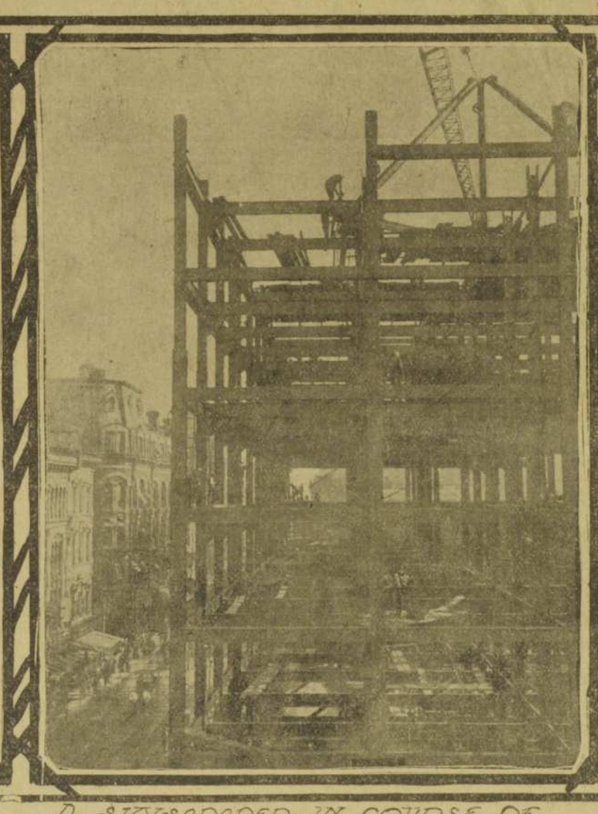

Louisville offers a welcome to the stranger within her gates, and affords an exceptional social life.

While we marvel at the growth of the city to-day, we shall probably marvel still more ten years hence. The South is being developed as never before. It is a section of vast riches, a section that now promises more than any other, and by reason of geographical location, if nothing else, Louisville is bound to share in and reflect her prosperity. Not only that, but Kentucky has an area of 41,383 square miles, only 1,500 being unfit for agriculture, while there are 15,680 square miles of coal-bearing measures, with several seams of high grade coking coal, four definite iron ore horizons, rich deposits of lead, zinc and fluor spar, and riches in oils, clays, stone and rock asphalt, there being enough of the latter to build a highway sixty feet wide around the world.

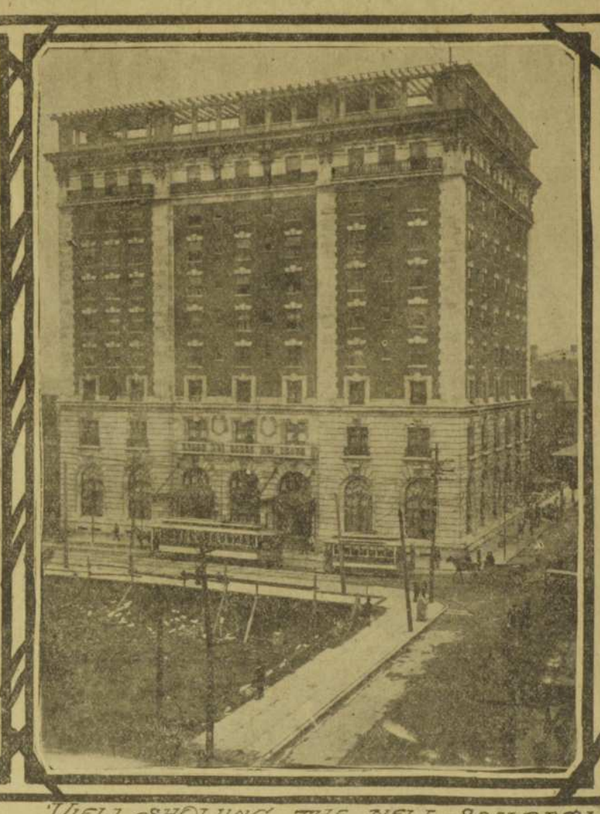

The largest city of a State, having so many natural advantages, and a modern city in every sense of the present day meaning, what is to check the growth of Louisville in the future? Who can estimate her progress ten years, twenty years, or a half century hence?

VOL. CV. NEW SERIES—NO. 13,67[illegible] LOUISVILLE, WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 13, 1906. PRICE {THREE CENTS. ON TRAINS FIVE CENTS.

Welcome Home, Kentuckians!

J. C. W. BECKHAM, GOVERNOR OF KENTUCKY.

PAUL C. BARTH, MAYOR OF LOUISVILLE.

TO ALL absent sons and daughters of Kentucky unto whom these presents shall come, Greeting:

As the fond parent yearns for the return of an absent child, so does your mother Commonwealth rejoice in the prospect of bringing you back, even for a visit, to the Old Kentucky Home. Wherever you have wandered, into whatever lands or climes you may have gone to take up your abode, you are now by parental authority summoned back to the proud old State that gave birth to you or to your forefathers. The old dinner horn, that in days of yore told you of the approaching meal, has been taken down from the wall and there issues from its sonorous and hospitable mouth a trumpet call reaching the remotest corners of the earth, and breathing into the ear of every homesick Kentuckian the musical and irresistible appeal that he drop all else and forthwith begin his pilgrimage back to his native heath. A joyous welcome awaits you; feasts and festivals have been prepared to gladden your hearts; burgoo and barbecues will awaken old and delightful memories in you; music and song, in sweetest strains, will cheer and comfort you; oratory and speech in eloquent terms will recount to you the love which your old State bears for you and the interest and pride she has taken in your success in other lands.. As the genial sun of spring warms into life the beauties of nature, so will the kindly glances and friendly grasps of your old friends in Kentucky inspire in you, if possible, a greater and tenderer love for the State you once left. Peace and plenty shall be yours, and hardened, indeed, must be the heart that resists such an invitation and parental appeal. "God's Country" in June will put on her loveliest garb for you; nature will wear, as she can wear only in Kentucky, her brightest wreath of flowers and smiles, the feathered songsters will gaily join in the musical celebration; green pastures, shady woodlands, rolling hillsides, and picturesque streams, will in glorious and gorgeous style bespeak the welcome which thrills every heart.

We have this great event for your coming in Louisville, from June 13 to 17; thence you may radiate into all parts of the State, where equally hospitable welcomes will be given you.

Now, therefore, as Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, I, J. C. W. Beckham, do by these presents, and by the authority of the parent, which Kentucky claims over all her children, even unto the third and fourth generation, command each and every former Kentuckian, whether separated from us by imaginary State lines or broad seas, to come back home, if he be at the plow, the forge, the counting-room, the business office, or in whatever employment, let him for the time cease his work and return home. Men, women and children, who possess the priceless heritage of having a drop of Kentucky blood in their veins, must obey these commands and fail not to be with us during this gala period. It is not necessary to issue any commands to the people here as to the treatment of the guests, for the former are anxious beyond measure to show them that the Old Kentucky Home is just as good now as it ever was.

J. C. W. Beckham.

THAT happy inspiration of the Commercial Club, will be the most unique and successful celebration in the history of this City and State. Every citizen of Louisville has given an enthusiastic approval to the suggestion. From every State in the Union former Kentuckians have sent messages of acceptance, coupled with expressions of gratitude for the opportunity to visit the old home, renew former friendships and cement old friendships. The States seem to vie with each other with the number of visitors each will send, and with the same feeling our people vie with one another as to who will make this gathering a success. The spirit of hospitality, characteristic of the Kentuckian, will find its most perfect expression in the welcome Louisville will extend to its visitors. There will be open hearts and open doors; a genuine whole-souled Kentucky greeting for everyone.

Paul C. Barth

THE COMPLETE PROGRAMME FOR HOME-COMING WEEK.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 13.
(Reception and Welcome Day.)

11 o'clock a. m.—General welcoming exercises in the main drill hall of the new Armory. Addresses of welcome by Mr. Henry Watterson, Hon. J. C. W. Beckham, Governor of Kentucky, and Hon. Paul C. Barth, Mayor of Louisville. Response by Hon. David R. Francis, of St. Louis. Decoration, with handsome medal, of Miss Louise Lee Hardin, of Denver, Col., who suggested "Home-coming Week."

3 p. m.—Handsome Floral Parade over a long route, through residence and business sections of the city. Eight Divisions, three to be devoted to automobiles, one to two-horse open carriages, one to one-horse traps and tandems, one to tallyhos and four-in-hands, one to pony carts, and one to the Fire Department; the last named showing modern fire fighting apparatus alongside of the old engines and hose reels of days "before the war."

8 p. m.—Philharmonic Concert in new Armory.

(Stephen Collins Foster Day.)

2 p. m.—Unveiling in new Armory of statue of Stephen Collins Foster, who wrote "My Old Kentucky Home," erected out of subscriptions from the school children of Kentucky, and modeled by J. L. Roop, the sculptor. This statue is ultimately to be cast in bronze and placed in the new Capitol, now being erected at Frankfort. Addresses by Hon. Sidney P. Redding, of Little Rock, Ark., and R. W. Miller, of Richmond, Ky. Songs written by Foster sung by a chorus of one thousand school children.

8 p. m.—Band concert and colored chorus in Central Park.

FRIDAY, JUNE 15.
(Daniel Boone Day.)

2 p. m.—Unveiling in Cherokee Park of statue of Daniel Boone, modeled by Miss Enid Yandell, the sculptor, and presented to the city of Louisville through the Board of Park Commissioners by Col. C. C. Bickel.

3 p. m.—Reproduction of Indian attack on Fort Boonesboro—a spectacular feature of "Home-coming Week." Settlers busily engaged in peaceful pursuits are attacked by Indians while Daniel Boone is off on hunting trip. Exciting conflict. Annihiliation imminent, when Boone comes to the rescue.

5 p. m.—Old-fashioned dances on a specially arranged dance floor over the tennis courts of the Park. Apple paring contests and corn husking bees.

8 p. m.—Night Pageant over long route in the heart of the city.

10 p. m.—Grand Ball in new Armory, inaugurated by the reception and welcome of Daniel Boone, typifying "Old Kaintuck," by the Queen of the Ball and her court, as representing the "New Kentucky." This ball will be the largest function of the kind ever given in the South. The floor space to be devoted to dancing will be more than twice as large as the dance floor of the Horse Show Building, in which all previous big balls have been given.

SATURDAY, JUNE 16.
(Greater Kentucky Day.)

12 o'clock (noon)—Laying of corner stone of new Capitol at Frankfort. All living Governors of Kentucky to participate in ceremonies. Special trains to be run over L. and N. and C. and O. to accommodate those wishing to witness this important event in the State's history.

3:30 p. m.—Reception in Central Park to all visitors, given in honor of distinguished ex-Kentuckians present. Brief addresses by Hon. John G. Carlisle, Hon. William Lindsay, Justice John M. Harlan, Hon. Shelby M. Cullom, Hon. W. J. Stone, Hon. S. H. Piles, Hon. E. W. Hoch, Hon. Preston H. Leslie, Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson and other former Kentuckians who have achieved greatness beyond the confines of their native State.

4:30 p. m.—Ceremonies in Central Park over the Log Cabin in which Abraham Lincoln was born. Addresses by Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, of Illinois, and Mr. Henry Watterson. This log cabin has been kindly loaned to the Commercial Club Home-coming Association by the Lincoln Memorial Association of New York City. It will be placed on exhibition in Central Park on Monday, June 11, and will remain on exhibition for one week.

8 p. m.—Rally of Kentucky societies of other States in the new Armory. This part of the programme will be left largely with different organizations attending "Home-coming Week."

SUNDAY, JUNE 17.
("Till We Meet Again Day.")

11 a. m.—Pulpits of Louisville churches filled by visiting ministers.

5 p. m.—Children's services in Central Park, Cherokee Park and Shawnee Park.

GREAT SOIL RENOVATOR.

WE have with us to-day those who have left the old Kentucky home and have taken up their abode in various parts of the world. Many are the reasons that have prompted them to leave the land of their birth but it is safe to assert that there is not one among the vast throng of home-comers but feels the same thrill and whose heart swells with emotion when he hears the sweet strains of "My Old Kentucky Home." While the fatted calf is being killed and we sit with our guests around the old hearthstone made sacred by many fond memories, the time is opportune to review the progress we have made.

Those who have returned to us for a time will be told of the general prosperity that has come to the State. The wonderful growth of our metropolis will be recounted as well as the growth of the lesses cities and the towns and villages. And the crowning feature will be witnessed in the laying of the corner stone of the new Capitol building at Frankfort. But with all these visible signs of prosperity there is no factor so potent in the development of a State like Kentucky as the progress of its agricultural interests.

Agricultural Development.

When many of those who are with us to-day left Kentucky there was little thought of the State's development agriculturally. The soil was fertile, crops were abundant and the people were content. A normal sum was set aside by the State for this work and the general complaint was that this was too much. To-day there is a wonderful change. The State has set apart $33,000 annually for the development of her agricultural resources and $15,000 additional has been appropriated for the holding of an annual State Fair. But above all this, the farmers of Kentucky have taken on a spirit of enterprise that will mean much for the future of the State. Kentucky is essentially an agricultural State and as long as her farmers are prosperous the other interests will not suffer.

A State that can produce upwards of 200,000,000 pounds of tobacco annually, to say nothing of the other crops, and can maintain a remarkable degree of fertility despite the utter disregard of its husbandmen for system of science, certainly has a great future, now that her farmers are at last alive to their interests. The Yankee who invented the wooden nutmegs would long since have been associating with H. H. Rogers and John D. Rockefeller had he possessed a few hundred acres of such land.

But it is difficult for the man who inherits his fortune to see the poetry in the strenuous life, and so it was with the Kentucky landowner. As long as his broad acres produced enough to keep him in comfort, he was content to let it go at that without thought for his future or the future of the generations to follow. As her forests have been devastated with a ruthless hand, so has the fertility of Kentucky's soil found its way to the busy marts of trade, and the hour of redemption seemed a long way off. The prejudice of the farmer against scientific investigation and his disregard of intense farming held agricultural progress in check. It was only when he beheld with dismay the long procession of States that were slowly but surely forging ahead of the old Commonwealth whose sun and soil have made her famous in song and story, did the farmer realize that the world was moving the other way.

Awakening of the Farmer.

With this awakening on the part of the farmer came the receptive mood, and then the battle was half won. The fault lay not with the soil or climate but with the farmer. There are few Kentuckians who are willing to admit that the soil of Illinois, Indiana or other States is naturally more fertile than that of their own State. And yet Kentuckians are compelled to admit that in those States the farmers get more pounds and bushels to the acre. Notwithstanding their farms are smaller, the farmers of many other States are, as a whole, more prosperous than those of our State.

The cause should be patent to evry man who has given the subject thought. The farmers of those States have, in the first place, inaugurated a system in the management of their farms, whereby they are able to tell at the end of the year what they have gained or lost. Then they have followed a scientific system of crop rotation that has helped them to maintain the fertility of their soil. And possibly above all they have continued to feed stock with the idea that if they came out even on the live stock, they are the gainer by reason of the valuable manure they are constantly adding to their land.

But the Kenfucky farmers are aroused as never before. They have largely overcome the prejudices of the past and are seeking information. And this gives the Department of Agriculture at Washington and the State Department of Agriculture the opportunity they have been seeking. The desideratum was to get the farmers aroused to their own interests, and the rest was believed to be easy. So it proved to be. When the farmers began calling for institutes they were given them, and when, contrary to their expectations, they saw that the lecturers at these institutes were not only practical men, but men who have done things, the farmers regretted that they had not lent their co-operation long since.

* * *

Alfalfa and Corn Special.

The principal object of the Alfalfa and Corn Special was to arouse the interest of the farmers in scientific methods of agriculture. The Department of Agriculture was anxious that the farmers should raise alfalfa. It believed that Kentucky could raise it as well as any State in the Union without irrigation. And it has never changed its opinion.

Alfalfa is conceded to be the most valuable forage crop known, and if the acreage continues to be increased as it has in the past two years, it will prove a boon to the farmers of the State. The June report of the department will give the present acreage in Kentucky, and it is confidently expected that it will exceed 5,000 acres.

It was also realized that our farmers were wasting valuable time, energy and funds cultivating barren stalks and missing hills in the cultivation of their corn crops. An actual investigation of the conditions in various parts of the State proved this to be true. The work of Prof. Holden, of Iowa, and Prof. Scherffius, of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, is already beginning to tell. The farmers of Kentucky are beginning to select their seed corn at the proper time, and many of them are testing it before planting. In a few years the result of this work will be apparent and will be measured by pounds and bushels.

It was realized that the special would arouse interest because it was an innovation. The shrewd business man advertises to let people know he is in business. The Department of Agriculture wanted to let Kentucky farmers know it was in business. It was styled by a critic who is living in the time of Rameses II. as "a shrieking herald and a rolling chariot." The department is content to let it go at that. It accomplished the purpose it was intended for, and that is sufficient.

After all, every phase of life must be brought down to a plain, practical proposition. It was an easy matter to interest them after they were aroused. There is plenty to tell and there are sufficient specialists to make the truth known. The farmers want help; they want something practical and they want it quick. The day of glittering generalities is past as far as Kentucky is concerned. They want to hear men like Wing, Holden, Hopkins, Agee, Burbank, Coburn and the no less strong men of our experiment station.

Take Prof. H. Garman for example. He is probably better known and appreciated in many other States than in Kentucky, and he is certainly as well known in Europe as he is in his own State. Do you ask the reason? It is simple. It is because the farmers of Europe have for years been searching the world for just such information that the Kentucky farmer believed to be impracticable. It is because the farmers of other States in this country have been seeking to know what their soil contained and what the plants they were to foster required to make them healthy of growth and prolific.

Prof. Garman has been sending out to the farmers of the State the results of his researches for many years. The farmers of Kentucky are just beginning to fully appreciate the worth of the man. I speak of the people as a whole for there are those who have profited by scientific research and their fertile acres testify that research is gradually if slowly unfolding the mysteries of the half that has never been told.

The fact that the last General Assembly gave to the State Department of Agriculture $20,000 in addition to the present annual appropriation of $13,000 to carry on institute work, and for the general conduct of the bureau, is a strong evidence that the State is coming to the front agriculturally. A few years ago it would have been dangerous for the department to have even asked an increase. The disposition was rather to abolish than to aid the department. And yet the Legislators saw that work and the co-operation of the farmer was all that was required to redeem Kentucky as an agricultural and a stock feeding State, it was little trouble to get them to vote favorably on the measure.

Kentucky's Future.

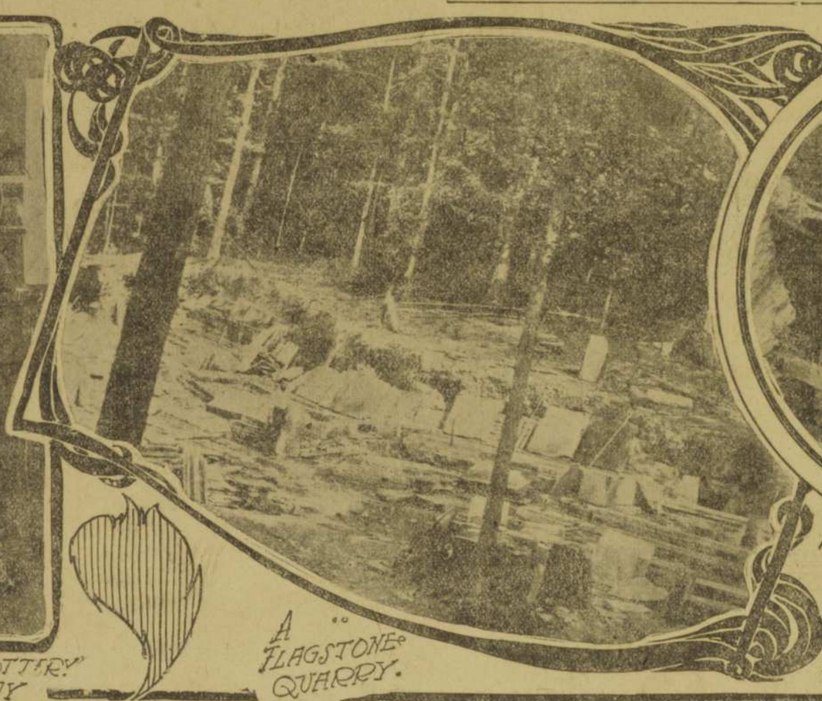

If the department has made any progress in the past few years, the good that can be accomplished in the next few years cannot be estimated. With an annual appropriation of $33,000, and with the farmers in hearty sympathy with the movement for a better Kentucky agriculturally, there is no excuse for failure. A State that nature has mantled with a garb of royal blue should be in the vanguard of the procession, and it is safe to predict she will be seen forging to the front like her offspring, the Kentucky thoroughbred.

Kentucky needs more young men with agricultural educations. There is always room at the top for such a man, and they are in great demand. Competent lecturers on agricultural subjects are scarce in Kentucky. The State Department of Agriculture proposes to hold 200 institutes in the State during the next institute season, and lecturers must be employed. But unless competent and thoroughly practical men are secured, all progress would be stopped. There is a great opportunity for the Kentucky boy who will take an agricultural education. There is a future for the young man who will farm Kentucky land on scientific principles.

Facts About the Great Mineral Wealth of Kentucky.

OUTCROP OF ASPHALT ROCK..

By C. J. NORWOOD, State Geologist.

EXCEPT in respect to hospitality, glorious women and manly men, the Home-coming Kentuckians will find a New Kentucky when they enter within the confines of their beloved Commonwealth. The sauntering days of old—as improvident as they are delightful—have passed away, to be succeeded by hustle and bustle and the quickstep of commercial progress. Old fogies are dead, and the "ancients" have shaved their beards and gone into training to regain their youth. In fact, the automobile has come, and the young man sits in front.

With the realization that law and politics are no longer the chief stepping stones to successful careers in the South, has come recognition of the great industrial opportunities offered within the State, and our young men, less affected than those of former days by the enchantment lent by distance to other lands, are directing their energies to their development. "State development" is the slogan from one end of Kentucky to the other, and soon even political preferment will in a measure depend upon one's attitude toward the fostering of enterprises that make for the industrial growth of the State.

One of the Favored States.

Truly, as remarked by the late Richard P. Rothwell, of the Engineering and Mining Journal, a most conservative man, "Kentucky is by nature, beyond all question, one of the most favored States in this country." Long pre-eminent on account of its fine stock, its grass lands and its tobacco fields, it is now winning attention as one of the richest mineral-bearing States of the Union; great as it is in agricultural advantages, it will become even greater in mines and allied industries. It is the part of the present writer to briefly sketch the mineral resources in which justification for such statement is to be found, and in doing so he must necessarily reproduce some matter he has presented hitherto.

The area of the State is about 41,283 square miles. Of that expanse about 15,680 square miles is covered by coal-bearing formations; a region of about 2,000 square miles in the west is rich in lead, zinc and fluorspar deposits; in the central part lead, zinc, barite, fluorspar and calcspar veins that will unquestionably prove of much commercial importance are found distributed over an area of about 4,000 square miles in extent; over the whole of the "Jackson's Purchase Region," an area of about 2,340 square miles, splendid clays about, with excellent sands, valuable siliceous earths and other minerals; adjacent to the eastern and southern margins of the western coal field is an area of perhaps 1,000 square miles, in which are to be found most excellent kaolins and plastic clays, while on the western margin of the same field are large areas of very high-class refractory clays or "fire sands," with some kaolins. In addition there are the great areas of fine clay and cement-making materials on the rim of the central region, passing from the Ohio in Mason and Lewis counties on the east around to the Ohio again in Jefferson and Oldham counties on the west, and on the margins of both coal fields; the large areas of the highest grade of fire-clay, in the eastern coal field, hundreds of square miles of iron ores of great excellence, most favorably placed with reference to fuel and flux; great areas of limestone and sandstone of the highest order for structural and other purposes; large areas of asphalt rock for paving and other purposes to which such rock is put; notably extensive fields of petroleum and natural gas, and of salt brines; immense areas of potash shales; regions of glass sand, of molders' sand, of flint, of metallic paint beds and pigment earths, and so on.

Indeed, it is doubtless within bounds to say that more than two-thirds of the total area of the State, including even the most fertile portions of it, are mineral-bearing in the commercial sense. No neighboring State can make so good a showing of varied mineral wealth, each class of which is of high excellence.

It will readily be understood that in the limited space allotted for this article an adequate account of the mineral beds indicated cannot be given; recourse must be had to the publications of the State Geological Survey. But even though it must be done all too briefly more particular attention should be called to some of the more notable of the deposits.

* * *

The Fields of Coal.

In bituminous coal no State is richer than Kentucky; no Southern State is so well endowed. As is generally known, the coal-bearing measures are disposed in two distinct fields, comprising a part of the Appalachian in the east and a part of the Illinois or Central in the west, as follows:

Eastern field, square miles, about	11,180
Western field, square miles, about	4,500
Total square miles	15,680

A very large proportion of each field is productive. Coal occurs in fifty-three counties, and workable beds in fifty-one. Forty-five counties are either in whole or in part covered with coal-bearing measures, and in eight others there are outlies of considerable extent. From nine to sixteen of the seams in the eastern field, and about eight in the western one, are, according to localities, of workable thickness. It is an axiom with mining engineers that the value of a property is determined by the amount of coal we can get from it, not by the amount it contains;" there is not a square mile of territory underlaid by workable coal in Kentucky where the conditions are such that all the coal possible under the most favorable conditions cannot be won. Commercial mining is carried on in twelve counties in the western field, and in fifteen in the eastern one. Although the western field is now producing nearly 1,500,000 tons more than the eastern one, the latter will soon be the great producing field. In 1905 the splendid coals of the upper Big Sandy Valley began to enter the markets, and the development of the equally excellent beds on the Kentucky drainage and in Harlan county cannot long be delayed. The highest point in the State, about 4,200 feet above the sea, is in the latter county, on Big Black Mountain, and there also the coal measures attain their greatest thickness, nearly 3,200 feet.

According to data recently furnished by Mr. James M. Hodge, of the State Geological Survey, now working in that little known but great coal area, coal beds appear at frequent intervals throughout the whole thickness of 3,200 feet; so far, sixteen of them have been found with a thickness of three feet, therefore workable. They range in thickness up to eight and, in exceptional cases, twelve feet of coal. Mr. Hodge says: "In quality they are coking coals, light in ash and sulphur, almost without exception; even the splint coal, which is common along with the other, coking well and sometimes extraordinarily so. Some of this coal mined and left on the dump for over ten years has shown no deterioration, either in appearance or by analysis. Occasional good working pockets of cannel appear in these beds. A hint of the rate of development which will follow the advent of railroads into the county, may be obtained by a glance into Wise county, Virginia. There the first coke was shipped in April, 1896, just ten years ago. Since then, almost the whole time, shipments have been limited by the number of ovens and by labor and car supply. Last year, from thirteen plants having 3,532 ovens, and from a few small plants without ovens, there were shipped, in round numbers, 2,000,000 tons of coal, and the same amount of coke. A railroad being constructed from Pennington to Big Stone gap, along the northern base of Stone mountain, for the development of Little Black mountain coal, will lead to mining close to and eventually across the State line into Kentucky. Already three coal plants are in operation, and a dozen or more (reported) and a coke plant are under construction on the line. All the foregoing plants are at or near what may be called the Big Stone Gap field. A line of railroad up Clover Fork, (Harlan county), would penetrate into the heart of it, and a development may reasonably be expected there and elsewhere in Harlan far in excess of the beginning now made across the line in Virginia."

Coking Coals.

Coking coal of excellence occurs in the larger number of counties included in the eastern field; in eight of them as high grade coking coal is found as is known in this country, while the coals for steam and domestic use are not excelled by those in any other field. The most notable coking beds are the upper and lower "Elkhorn," the former seam being the one to which the name originally applied. The coke made from the "Elkhorn" is admittedly equal, and in some respects superior, to the best Connellsville fuel—the standard of the country. It is probable that there are not less than 1,500 square miles of this coal showing as a thick bed; what this means will be understood when it is stated that more than ten years ago the area of available Connellsville coal was estimated at 111 square miles. The Pineville coke, made from what has been considered the southwestward extension of the "Elkhorn," is well known as one of the best cokes in the country, and is used for iron making and copper smelting. In Boyd county, coke made from a higher seam in the series, known as No. 6 of the eastern field, is used at the Ashland iron furnaces.

In the western field two excellent coking seams, remarkably persistent in thickness and quality, are found in seven counties. They are the beds from which coke is made in Hopkins, Union and Webster counties. The percentage of sulphur in the coke precludes it from the iron furnaces under present practice, but for domestic use and many manufacturing and certain smelting purposes it is all that need be desired. The coke acts well in the furnace, carries the burden well, and it may yet find service in blast furnaces running on pure ores. The present production of this western coke is used principally for lead smelting and domestic purposes. In addition to the coking beds named there are others that occur lower in the series and which are purer, but their distribution is more limited and their thickness more variable.

Cannel Beds.

Cannel of superior quality—much of it admirably suited for gas-making, and practically all of it valuable for domestic use—is found in sixteen or seventeen counties in the eastern field. Seven or eight of the coal horizons in that field carry cannel. These cannel beds, some of which are superior to the best cannels of Scotland, are remarkable not only for their richness in volatile elements and their persistency, but for the high candle-power of the volatile constituents. There are few examples showing less than 40 per cent. of volatile matter, while many yield 44, 50 and even 60 per cent., exhibiting at the same time low percentages of ash and less than 1 per cent. of sulphur.

In the western field three of the coal beds not infrequently carry cannel in noteworthy amount, and of such quality as to enhance the value of the bituminous products mined with it.

Kentucky ranks seventh among the coal-producing States, those standing ahead being Pennsylvania, Illinois, West Virginia, Ohio, Alabama and Indiana. This State may reasonably be expected to take sixth and probably fifth place within a few years. Within the last six years our production of commercial coal has nearly doubled, advancing from 4,505,439 tons in 1899 to over 8,000,000 tons in 1905.

In addition to the carbonate deposits distributed through the Coal Measures, which are chiefly valuable for paints, there are four special iron ore horizons in the State, namely:

First—In the lower part of the Coal Measures, both in the eastern and in the western field, where stratified carbonates and limonites occur at several regular levels. The ores of the Kentucky portion of the Hanging Rock iron region occur here. The limonites of this district run from 33.50 to 46.22 per cent. metallic iron, and the carbonates yield from 29.75 to 34.42 per cent. The excellent quality of the iron made from the ores is well known. In the western field are regions exceptionally rich in ores of this period. For general purposes, the composition of the ores known in the western region may be stated thus: Metallic iron, 33 to 49 per cent.; silica, 11 to 30 per cent.; phosphorus, 0.2 to 1.5 per cent.

Second—On top of the upper member of the St. Louis group of the lower carboniferous limestones, both in the eastern and in the western field, and in the southern part of the State, occurs a brown hematite of notable excellence. It is the ore from which the celebrated "Red river car-wheel iron" was made, in the Red river region (Eastern Kentucky), and from which the equally celebrated "boiler plate iron" of the Cumberland river district was made. The ore occurs in a number of counties, both east and west.

Third—An ore which hitherto has been referred to Oriskany age, in part, and in part to the Corniferous, concerning the precise place of which, however, the final word has not been said, occurs in Bath, Casey, Lincoln, Boyle, Clark, Montgomery and some other counties. It is represented by the "Preston" ore of Bath, along the northern front of Pine Mountain, in Bell and other southeastern counties, is a persistent ore deposit which has also been referred to this horizon, but about which little is as yet really known.

Fourth—Ore of Clinton age, the equivalent of the oolitic "dyestone ore," which extends along the eastern face of the Alleghenies from New York to Alabama, is found in several eastern counties. This well-known and valuable ore underlies a large area. There is reason to believe that it may be reached by drifting at the northern base of Pine Mountain, from Pike county southwestwardly. It is mined in Bath county and used at the Ashland furnaces.

Fluorspar, Barite, Zinc and Lead.

Remarkable deposits of fluorspar occur in Caldwell, Crittenden and Livingston counties, together with zinc and lead ores, and there are good chances that they may be found in Trigg and Lyon, and possibly in Christian county. The deposits occur in fissures following lines of very deep fracture in the Lower Carboniferous beds, the lines usually being marked by faults, and in sheeted zones. Mining is carried on principally for fluorspar and zinc, the galena being, so far, rather in the nature of a by-product. The quantity of fluorspar in the district is enormous. Few of the opened veins are worked down to as much as even 100 feet below water level, and below that depth the products seem to retain their character.

Next in importance to the fluorite, as regards quantity, is the zinc, which occurs chiefly as sphalerite, but with notable bodies of carbonate in weathered zones, and there is reason to believe that the quantity of zinc ore is much greater than is generally supposed. Large bands of calcite, three to twelve feet wide, appear on the walls of some of the larger veins, and some shipments of that spar have been made. Although the galena has so far been obtained rather as a by-product, still the quantity available is considerable, and the finding of an almost solid vein of it three feet in width at the May Belle mine in 1905 is significant.

Deposits of barite appear to be of comparatively rare occurrence in the district, though a few carloads have been mined and shipped. The importance of this district with respect to the fluorspar market is illustrated by the fact that of the estimated 50,000 tons of fluorite produced in the United States during 1905, more than 20,000 tons were raised from Western Kentucky mines. Of the eighteen companies in the United States producing and preparing fluorspar for market, twelve were operating in Kentucky. Besides the producing companies, there were numerous others in the district, developing properties during the year, the total number of companies holding properties in the district being about ninety.

I think it beyond question that the mineral veins of the central part of the State afford the basis upon which may be established important commercial enterprises. They occur in many counties. The veins, of which there is a remarkable number, occur in fissures of very considerable depth—known to extend from the top of the Lexington ("Trenton") down into the Campmeilson ("Chazy"), reaching a depth of 245 feet in the latter well without showing any indication of a tendency to close. The mineral contents vary with the formation through which the fissure passes. In the Lexington, barite is the prevailing veinstone, with in places a considerable percentage of galena, or of sphalerite if calcite comes in quantity; as they pass from the Lexington into the Tyrone, calcite and fluorite begin to predominate, and from near the top of the Tyrone down into the Campmeilson ("Chazy"), as far as the latter has been penetrated, fluorite and calcite prevail. Very many of the veins are of easily workable width, ranging from two or three to six and nine feet. The most notable mining developments in the galena-bearing barite deposits are in Henry, Owen, Franklin and Scott counties.

The production of petroleum and natural gas has already become one of the most important industries of the State, and there is reason to believe that it is merely in its infancy. Our oil and gas are obtained from a number of formations, some of the latter producing from several horizons. Named in their vertical order they are as follows: (1) in the Conglomerate (Pottsville) series, several horizons; (2) in the St. Louis, probably in Pike and Martin counties; (3) in the Waverly and Keokuk—Waverly, several horizons, one of them producing the Cloverport gas; (4) in the Devonian, the black shale producing the gas of Meade county, and the Corniferous producing the Ragland and Irvine oils and the Menifee gas; (5) in the Upper Silurian, affording the Boyd's creek oil of Barren and the "Clinton" oil of Barren, Wolfe and Morgan counties; (6) in the Cincinnatian (Hudson of Linney), at least four horizons; (7) in the Mohawkian (Trenton) in the upper portion producing the Lower Sunnybrook oil, and in the lower portion affording the lower sands of Barren, Wayne, Clinton and Cumberland; the Knox Dolomite (?) yielding the deep sand of Wayne; (8) in the Calciferous, affording the deep gas sand of Estill county. It is believed that intelligent prospecting will develop profitable fields in the western part of the State. Reference is made to the bulletin which has been issued by the survey for further information on this subject.

Stone and Clay Deposits.

Our stone and clay deposits have been sadly neglected, and yet if properly developed would come second in importance only to coal. With a better "oolite" for structural purposes than that of Indiana, and with more of it provided with ample transportation facilities for transportation, and with cation of a tendency to close. The mineral contents vary with the formation through which the fissure passes. Our stone and clay deposits have been sadly neglected, and yet if properly developed would come second in importance only to coal. With a better "oolite" for structural purposes than that of Indiana, and with more of it provided with ample transportation facilities for transportation, and with large areas of as beautiful and durable a freestone as that of Ohio, yet we fall far behind those States in production.

It is to be hoped that some of the far-seeing "home-comers" will perceive the opportunity offered in our stores of building stone and profit thereby. That our clays have been passed by is doubtless due to inappreciation of the importance of such material by those at home, and lack of information on the part of clay-workers concerning the technical values of the various beds; to cure the one and supply the other is one of the aims of the State Geological Survey—that Kentucky is destined to ultimately take a front place among the leading clay-producing States seems, to the writer, beyond question.

KENTUCKIANS WHO ARE COMING BACK HOME

LETTERS from all over the world have been received by Robert E. Hughes, secretary of the Louisville Commercial Club and Director General of Home-coming Week for Kentuckians, in Louisville. These letters are from natives or former residents of Kentucky who have wandered away, seeking new worlds to conquer, as was done by Daniel Boone, the "First Kentuckian," when Kentucky, with a few thousand people got too crowded for his comfort. They are in response to invitations sent out by the Commercial Club or as the result of printed accounts of the Home-coming that was in store for them.

Many of these letters are real heart throbs. In every one of them are indications of the passionate love of Kentuckians for Kentucky. Some of them are so full of feeling as to bring tears to the eyes of any reader. Many of the old Kentuckians, very likely, had not heard from kith nor kin for years and years. The invitations from the Commercial Club, coming as direct recognition from the old "Bluegrass" State, have carried with them floods of tender memories and recollections of happy days gone by that have overflowed in heart-felt expressions of acknowledgment.

Aged Men and Women Write.

Few of the writers appear to have considered what they have written, for they say things that do not endure the scrutiny of a rhetorician. They, especially those who are not trained writers, get their metaphors woefully mixed. Among the letters in the files at the offices of the Commercial Club are some written by old men and old women whose very life-blood shows in the words they have written. "Kentucky," they write, and then go wild about it. Some are illiterate, others are men and women of unmistakable culture, but he is the rare exception who has not something to say of the land of his nativity from the very depths of his heart. The hold that Kentucky has on the heart-strings of her sons and daughters is strikingly apparent to those who have occasion to read what they have written when Kentucky calls her children.

The waving bluegrass, seen in memory, beckons to all those who have strayed from the "bluegrass" country, and characteristic scenes in other parts of the Commonwealth play irresistibly on the feelings of those who have gone from them.

"Once a Kentuckian, always a Kentuckian," one man wrote about the sentiment.

"Kentucky will always be my home, no matter where I may happen to be staying," was written by one man who is commonly believed to sleep in a bed of roses, but who is not in Kentucky.

Many have sent verses, for it is easy to be a poet about Kentucky. Few of the verses are really printable, and although the writers may have been moved by a profound sentiment, it wasn't poetry when they wrote it. One old man, far past the allotted age, wrote briefly of his birth and life in Kentucky. He wrote of his great longing to see his old home once again, but was fearful because of his years and the weight of them. "I am feeble," he wrote simply, as he signed his name.

Many Invitations Sent Out.

Of the 600,000 native-born Kentuckians shown by the census reports to be living in other States and Territories of the Union, most by this time, have received invitations from the Commercial Club to participate in the festival of Home-coming Week in Louisville. Of these 600,000 ex-Kentuckians, so-called, many of them have risen to posts of trust and responsibility. One Adlai E. Stevenson, now of Bloomington, Ill., having conferred on him the next highest office in the gift of the American people. Of these 600,000 ex-Kentuckians, 189 have found their way into the pages of "Who's Who in America," a distinction, not so much in itself, but which speaks volumes for the man whose name is admitted. Former Kentuckians, everywhere, are doing honor to the State that gave them birth. An enumeration of the names and addresses of the 600,000 Kentuckians outside of their native State would use up 3,000 newspaper columns and the enumeration of the lists prepared by the Commercial Club so far as it has gone, would take a hundred pages of a full-grown newspaper. The immensity of what the Commercial Club has undertaken can scarcely be comprehended.

The plan has grown greatly since it was suggested by Miss Louise Lee Hardin, a Kentuckian of Denver, that it might prove interesting to get as many of the ex-Kentuckians who have grown famous as would get together in Kentucky. Her idea took, but, as it was considered, it unfolded until it attained to its present dimensions and includes every Kentuckian. Great or small, rich or poor, whatever his station, he will be made welcome. How many of the 600,000 will come is yet to be seen. Although the contemplation of Miss Hardin's plan provided for a reunion of Kentucky's sons and daughters on no mean scale, the present one is tremendous in comparison.

Distinguish Home-comers.

Of the distinguished Kentuckians, all have been urged to come to the Home-coming, and all who can be so persuaded will be given something to do on the programmes of the several days. Adlai E. Stevenson, a Christian boy, has accepted the invitation and will speak. Justice John M. Harlan, a Boyle county boy, has accepted and will deliver an address. Gov. Edward W. Hoch, of Kansas, a Danville boy, has accepted an invitation, as has Gov. Frank W. Hunt, of Idaho.

Among the Kentucky Mayors of great cities who have been invited to the Home-coming are Tom L. Johnson, of Cleveland, a native of Georgetown; ex-Mayor Henry V. Johnson, of Denver, formerly a Scott county boy.

Here follow extracts from some of the letters received by each State, classified as to the State from which the letter came:

ALABAMA.

MOST of these Kentuckians who have wandered from their own firesides seem to have been drawn more strongly toward the West than toward the East, North or the South. Alabama has its quota of Kentuckians, and successful ones, as well as all other States and countries. The Kentucky Club of New Decatur is preparing to attend the Home-coming reunion in a body. Dr. T. G. Hughes is now president of the organization, which has sixty or more members. The club is now planning to get all the ex-Kentuckians of New Decatur on its roll and will make arrangements to have quarters together in Louisville during the week of Home-coming. The Kentucky Club was organized at the time of the death of Cockrell, and when Gov. Buckham was inaugurated for the first time presented him with a gold-headed cane. The trip to Louisville will be made in a special car, decorated for the occasion.

In Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Connor, of New Decatur, Alabama, according to what Mr. Conner has to say in a letter to Mr. Hughes, has "two Kentuckians who would love to come home again."

Dr. D. M. Lawson, of Birmingham, organized a Kentucky Club to foster the Home-coming spirit. The members of the club will attend the reunion in a body.

James Arthur McKnight, of Calera, known for his lecture, "The South Today," has written that he will be in Louisville to attend the Home-coming reunion.

In Alabama lives the youngest ex-Kentuckian to write for an invitation to attend the Home-coming to date. She is Miss Mannie Moore, of Sheffield. Although she is only twelve years of age, she is enthusiastic in her desire to return to her old Kentucky home again. Her father and mother were born in Virginia, but she is a native of Lexington. She writes as follows:

"I have seen in the papers that the people of dear old Kentucky are going to have a great Home-coming in June. I am a little girl and was born in Lexington, Ky. My father and mother were born in old Virginia. I have older brothers and sisters who were born there also, but they love the dear old Bluegrass State as well as I do. I hope to be able to attend the Home-coming. Mamma and papa say if I study real hard I can come. Hoping it will be a success, like everything else in old Kentucky, and with best wishes to you and all Kentuckians, I am yours respectfully, MANNIE MOORE."

Kate Slaughter McKinney, of Montgomery, a composer of more than local reputation, has signified her desire to attend the Home-coming. She suggested that her song, "The Green Kentucky Pastures," would be appreciated as a part of the programme of the week.

ARKANSAS.

MANY exiled Kentuckians have found homes in Arkansas, but not many letters from them have found their way into the files of the Commercial Club, largely for the reason that the State has been thoroughly canvassed for names of Kentuckians by the Kentucky Club, of Little Rock, the capital and largest city of the State. Mrs. Josie Frazee Cappleman is secretary of the club.

Gen. Virgil Y. Cook, of Elmo, a former Kentuckian who served in the Confederate army with distinction, has written to Col. Bennett H. Young, that:

"Barring the intervention of Providence, I will be on hand Home-coming Week. It will be of much interest to me, the meeting of so many who are already there and hundreds who are to come that week."

Gen. Cook was born at Boydsville, Graves county, Ky., November 14, 1848. He was in Company E, Twelfth Kentucky cavalry, and later transferred to Company H, Seventh mounted infantry, under Forrest. He was actively engaged all through the war. At present he is commander of his camp of Confederate Veterans. Commanding the Third division of Forrest's corps, he ranks as Major General. In the war with Spain he was Colonel of the Second regiment, Arkansas infantry. He was, at one time, a member of the Board of Trustees of the University of Arkansas.

R. D. Duncan, cashier of the State National Bank of Little Rock, Ark., has accepted an invitation for Home-coming Week. Mr. Duncan was born in Claysville, Ky., but after receiving his education at a Missouri college, he entered the banking business in St. Joseph, Mo., and has steadily risen in his chosen line of endeavor. The State National Bank is one of the largest and most progressive in Arkansas and Mr. Duncan is known as one of the leading financiers of that State. His reputation as a bank examiner is one of the big things of Arkansas.

H. R. Barkley, of Abbott, has accepted an invitation to the Home-coming. He is connected with the Rock Island railroad.

Mrs. Ellen Rawlings Breedlove, of Fort Smith, is another exiled Kentuckian who longs to greet old friends again and see the bluegrass pastures, once familiar. She has accepted.

W. G. Vincenhellier, director of the Arkansas Agricultural Experiment Station, at Fayetteville, is enthusiastic in accepting the invitation to be present.

M. B. Willis, postmaster at Sarassa, left Kentucky in April, 1839, and in all the sixty-seven years has never been back to his native State. He is the only one of a large family that is left. With his father, Dr. Robert Willis, he and a small party left the home in Lincoln county to go to Texas. The party went on the steamer Edward Shipping from Warsaw. Col. Andrew Ross was at the head of the expedition. Mr. Willis writes in the fashion of the quaint old school and is eager to come to the reunion. He is seventy-eight years of age, and if he does manage to get to Louisville will enter as a candidate for the "longest gray" medal.

William Decie Jones, a lineal descendant of Daniel Boone, has written from his home in Eureka Springs that he intends to come to Louisville in June. "I am a great-great-grandson of Daniel Boone, and want to compete for the prize offered for the closest relationship," he writes.

ARIZONA.

MANY Kentuckians have found homes for themselves in Arizona. Among them are many of note and standing. Harry C. Blain, of Jerome, Ariz., a grand-nephew of Daniel Boone, has accepted an invitation for Home-coming Week.

Charles E. Arnold, of Phoenix, Ariz., was largely instrumental in organizing the Arizona and Kentucky Association, which is behind a movement to get as many ex-Kentuckians as possible to return for a few days to the homes of their childhood. Vernon L. Clark, of Phoenix, is president of the organization. Mr. Arnold is secretary. In the letters they have written to the Commercial Club these men have had very little to say about themselves.

From Tuscon, Miss Vanette Barrett and Judge W. M. Lovell have written asking that they be sent invitations to Home-coming Week, although they have not indicated whether or not they will attend.

Few of the Arizona people who have written have indulged in anything except a plain business-like statement of what they want to know. Letters were received from E. G. Strickler, an attorney at Bisbee, and from Mrs. Strickler, both of whom are native Kentuckians, and both of whom are anxious for a sight of the old homes.

CALIFORNIA.

STRICKEN California is the home of hundreds of ex-Kentuckians. Little has been heard from that State since the calamity of some time ago, although it is feared that the disaster will have the result of detaining many who had purposed to attend the Home Coming. Previous to then the tone of the letters was most happy. Few of those from whom letters have been received lived in San Francisco.

"I am a Kentuckian by birth, breeding and political tendencies," wrote Miss Nannie Holmes Taylor, of San Jose. "I have been in the Golden West but one year and intend to return in June. Residing in the same house is another former Kentuckian of some note, an old Confederate soldier of Price's army, who has been away from his native town of Shelbyville for forty years. He is Capt. H. C. Newman, and he, too, wants to come home."

* * *

Teacher and Journalist.

Miss Taylor is a teacher and journalist and is from Goliatin county. Capt. Newman has been away from Kentucky for four years.

Dr. L. Michael, Health Officer of Ferndale, wrote:

"I am coming for Home-coming if I live, and will bring my folks with me. I was born and raised in Cynthiana, Harrison county, and I have always been homesick to go back. I want to act as your promoter in this county without fee and with hearty good will. I know of at least fifty ex-Kentuckians in the county and will give them a strong talk to show them that they should once again see their noted State."

Dr. Michael proved to be as good as his word.

To show what the ex-Kentuckians in Los Angeles felt like this extract from a letter from H. C. Warden will help some:

"I am getting a list of the members of the Kentucky Association here with a view to circularizing them, hoping to learn their intentions about attendance in Louisville during Home Coming Week. I would be delighted to render the Commercial Club of Louisville any assistance in my power in this territory."

Lindsey Prather, Jr., wrote a most enthusiastic letter from Montague, saying that he will use every endeavor to participate in the Home Coming festivities, and visit the home of his father and grandfather.

After fifty-six years' absence from Kentucky, John Wells, of East Auburn, hopes to come to Louisville during Home-coming Week in June. Mr. Wells was born in New Liberty, Owen county, in 1827, and if he is able to come to the reunion, he intends to see if any of his boyhood friends are still living in Owen county.

Another old Kentuckian, who thinks he has been away about as long as any of them is John J. O'Dale, of Kings county. He wrote:

* * *

Back To the Old Home.

"I am very desirous of visiting the old home once more, as I left Kentucky in 1851 at the age of fourteen years, and have not been back to the State since. My native county is Bourbon."

"Words cannot describe the thrill of joy it gives me to think that many of us, so many miles from home, might meet with many from whom we have been separated for years, at the Home-coming reunion next June," wrote Mrs. Robert Pennington, of Los Angeles. "I therefore hasten to respond to the request of the Commercial Club by sending the names of my son and his wife, my husband and myself. I trust it may be our pleasure at that time to meet with many of the noblest people on earth—namely, Kentuckians. In my travels I find no people who cling to each other as Kentuckians, and I am proud to say we are all native Kentuckians. The move on the part of the Commercial Club certainly is deserving of applause, loud and long, and I want to have the pleasure of adding my voice to such a demonstration of praise."

Mrs. Nancy Nettie Johnston, of Oakland, wrote:

"I have just read about the Home-coming of all Kentuckians. Oh, how I should love to be there. If possible, I shall, as I was born in Kentucky, within half a mile of Port Royal, Henry county. I wish you would send me one of your invitations, which I would prize so highly."

Dr. C. C. Violett, of Westminster, wrote:

"I beg to humbly confess that I am one of the prodigals and have sinned against God and in their sight. I left Kentucky in 1901. Having been graduated from the old University of Louisville in 1892, I was engaged in active practice of medicine at my old home in Gallatin county for nine years. While fairly successful from a business standpoint out here, yet my longing is for a glimpse of the classic old hills of my native State and for the hearty hand-clasp of her sons. I would fain return and be the least among her servants, but if I am not permitted to be one of that penitent band who will get forgiveness in June, my heart will be there and will rejoice in their pardon and their fullness of fatted calf and juleps. May the joys of their coming be exceeded only by the pleasure of their staying, and if I am not one of the number I beg to assure you that my tears will be penitent and bitter. May God bless you in this noble work and grant them peace and pardon."

Absent Since 1845.

Mrs. R. E. Rotchford, of Oakland, has been away from Kentucky since 1845, and hopes to return in June. Mrs. Rotchford was Miss Ruth Mills, of Louisville.

D. W. Koppikus, of East Oakland, left Louisville before he was one year of age. Mr. Koppikus wrote to Mr. Hughes:

"I know nothing about the grand old State, but I can assure you that I love the place of my birth, and hope that in the near future I will have the pleasure of visiting old Kentucky."

Thomas McGrady, formerly of Belleview, Ky., now of San Francisco, has accepted a Home-coming invitation, although it cannot be told what effect the disaster out there will have on his carrying out his desires. Mr. McGrady was at one time a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, and was in charge of the church at Belleview. He also held pastorates at Cynthiana and Lexington. He was known as the socialist priest. His radical utterances eventually brought upon him the displeasure of the ecclesiastical authorities and he finally abandoned the priesthood and took up law. Before leaving Kentucky he practiced at Newport, his home. He now frequently lectures on Socialism. Mr. McGrady has written several books, including, "The Mistakes of Ingersoll," "The Two Kingdoms," and "The Voice From England."

A Special From California.

Between Mr. Hughes, director general of the Home-coming, and J. Marion Brooks, secretary of the Kentucky Society of Los Angeles, there have passed many letters. There are 550 names on the rolls of the Los Angeles Kentucky Society, and it is the intention to run a special train from that part of California to Louisville. W. P. Knott is president of the society; Miss Lura W. Riehl, assistant secretary, and Gen. John R. Mathews, treasurer.

Dr. E. B. Bryan, of the Board of Health of Eureka; Miss Eva Bedinger, of the Beale Memorial Library, Bakersfield, and William Fontaine Shanks, of Oakland, have signified their intention to attend the Home-coming.

Two descendents of Commodore Perry, Miss Kate L. Whitten, of Oakland, Cal., and Mrs. George Race Morling of St. Louis, Mo., have requested invitations and have expressed their intention of attending the Home-coming. Miss Whitten was born in Campbell county in 1869, while her father, an officer in the Union army, was stationed at the Louisville barracks.

COLORADO.

FOR utter abandonment in the tone of his acceptance of the invitation to Home-coming, this Colorado man leads them all. He is James W. Goff, of the Pajarita Pear Orchard, Grand Junction. He wrote to Mr. Hughes:

"I am going to come if I have to sell the cook stove and walk. I left Green county, Ky., in 1854 and I am sixty-one years of age. If I have any relatives, they are in Kentucky. I am a great horseman and full of sport. I like pretty women and plenty of them. Like to have a bout with the boys just to see who is the best man. Like to say to the Governor of North Carolina, 'It's a long time between drinks.'" Mr. Goff's letter evoked a cordial reply.

Colorado has a special claim on the affections of native Kentuckians everywhere, as it is the present home of Miss Louise Lee Hardin, the young woman who first suggested the Home-coming idea to the Commercial Club. Her suggestion, although it developed into a plan of a much larger scope than she conceived, is responsible for the great reunion that is to be. Miss Hardin is president of the National Business Woman's League, with headquarters at Denver, and editor of the Business Woman's Magazine. She is a daughter of Dr. A. H. Hardin, of Avoca. She is an enthusiastic worker for the success of the Home-coming and has been of great assistance to the local club.

Colorado has several ex-Kentuckians who have gone to the front. Among them is Henry V. Johnson, former Mayor of Denver and law partner of Sterling B. Toney, formerly of Louisville. "Who's Who in America" has this to say about him: Born in Scott county, Ky., August 6, 1852. Son of George W. Johnson, Provisional Governor of Kentucky, 1861-1862 (killed at Shiloh); graduate of Georgetown University (college 1871, and Law College, University of Louisville, 1873 (L.L. D.); practiced law in the office of Harlan & Bristow, Louisville, 1873-75; practiced at Georgetown, 1875 to 1885, and was three times the County Attorney of Scott county. He removed to Denver in 1885 on account of Mrs. Johnson's health. She died in 1886. Judge Johnson was married in 1892 to a daughter of Congressman John Berry, of Upper Sandusky, O. He was United States Attorney for Colorado from 1893 to 1897 and was elected Mayor of Denver on the Democratic ticket, April 4, 1899, against the opposition of three other candidates and all four of the daily newspapers of Denver. He won on a platform of municipal ownership of public utilities, of which he is a strong advocate. He was elected president of the League of American Municipalities, in September, 1899."

Proud of His Old State.

"I am still a Kentuckian and proud of it," wrote Mrs. M. B. Exley, of Willits, Col. "I left the dear old State four years ago, and am anxious to pay a visit to the old home."

"We are much interested in the plans for the Home-coming, and hope to avail ourselves of the opportunity to go back home. We heartily congratulate the Commercial Club on its most worthy efforts."

Extract from a letter by Mr. and Mrs. James B. Williams, of Greely.

John T. West, Mayor of Pueblo, is another Kentuckian in Colorado who has attained to high position. In accepting the invitation of the Commercial Club he wrote:

"I am proud of the fact that I am a native-born Kentuckian, and have never seen the time that I was ashamed to acknowledge it. I was born in Simpson county, near Frankfort, but moved to Warren county in '76, and left Bowling Green in March, 1880. I have been in Colorado ever since. Next thing to Kentucky is Colorado. Pueblo, of which I am now Mayor, is a city of 60,000 inhabitants."

Mrs. Belle Lathan, of Denver, writes to the Commercial Club that Home-coming Week has done two things for her. It not only gave her a chance, she said, to come to Louisville in June and meet her old friends, but, as a result of the announcement of the reunion she has discovered that there is a Kentucky Society in Denver, with which she intends to be associated.

"I do love Kentucky, and all the dear old people," she writes. "I was born in Kentucky, near Flemingsburg, the dearest spot on earth, and, if possible, I intend to be present at the reunion."

Hiram S. Shreve, formerly a well-known society man of Louisville, now in the insurance business at Sterling, will be one of the home-comers next June. He has taken great interest in Home-coming Week, and has forwarded lists of many former Kentuckians he met in his new home. Mr. Shreve has been in Colorado for four years, but said that he will never cease to look upon Louisville as his home. Mr. Shreve is a member of the family that had the palatial residences at Sixth and Walnut, where the armory now stands. His people entertained President Grant and Prince Edward when they visited Louisville.

The Rev. James C. Rawlings, pastor of the First M. E. Church, South, of Colorado Springs, and F. A. Richardson, librarian of the Colorado Supreme Court, both former Kentuckians, have accepted the invitation to the Home-coming and have sent long lists of names to the Commercial Clubs.

An Aged Home-Comer.

S. K. Roberts, of Fountain, an aged Kentuckian of eighty-eight years, has written of his desire to attend the reunion and thanking the club. He is a native of Mt. Sterling.

The Kentucky Home Association, of Denver, is a flourishing body which is taking an active interest in the success of the Home-coming. Many letters have passed between the officers of the organization and the Commercial Club, and many lists of names of ex-Kentuckians have been received. Caldwell Yeamans is president of the association, Judge Henry V. Johnson is vice-president, Mrs. Ida M. Monarch is second vice-president, Willard B. Lay is secretary, Mrs. Ida Carter Dameron is treasurer. The directors are: Judge Sterling B. Toney, Budd Hardesty, William R. Ramsey, Christopher F. Clay, John H. P. Voorhies, Mrs. Susie D. Carstarphin and Miss Generose White.

CONNECTICUT.

ACCORDING to figures sent to Mr. Hughes by C. N. Bangs, of Lynn, Mass., Connecticut has only 324 exiled Kentuckians within its borders. From only one of these, T. R. Barnum, of New Haven, who asked for a map of Louisville, was any letter received.

DELAWARE.

THERE are about as few former Kentuckians in Delaware as in Connecticut. Very few letters were received from Delaware people, and requests to the Mayors of Delaware cities evoked only short and unsatisfactory replies. Mrs. Mary Hayman, of Wilmington, accepted the invitation. She was born in Louisville, March 7, 1841, and was a daughter of John Kaylor.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

AMONG the Government officials and the clerks in the Government departments at the Capitol are many exiled Kentuckians. John M. Harlan, Justice of the United States Supreme Court, is of Washington, and one of the greatest of all the Kentuckians. In a recent letter he accepted the invitation to the Home-coming and spoke of the pleasure it would give him. He suggested that the date of the festival be changed from June 13 to June 1, the anniversary of the day when Kentucky was admitted to the Union, and his birthday. His suggestion came too late to be practicable.

Everybody knows most everything about Justice Harlan. John Marshall Harlan has been Associate Justice of the Supreme Court since November 29, 1877. He was born in Boyle county June 1, 1833, also the anniversary of the admittance of the State to the Union. He was a son of the Hon. James Harlan, and was named after Chief Justice John Marshall. He was graduated from Center College in 1850, and has received degrees of LL. D. from Bowdoin, Center College and the College of New Jersey. He studied law at Transylvania University and practiced at Frankfort.

He was married in 1856 to Miss Malvina F. Shanklin, daughter of John Shanklin, of Evansville, Ind. He was County Judge in 1858, and Whig candidate for Congress in the Ashland district in 1859. He was an elector on the Bell and Everett ticket in 1860. He removed to Louisville and practiced law here after 1867.

* * *

His Record In the War.

He was Colonel of the Tenth Kentucky Regiment in the Union army in the Civil War, serving from 1861 to 1862. From 1863 to 1867 he was Attorney General of Kentucky, after which he resumed his practice of law. He was the Republican nominee for Governor in 1871 and again in 1875, but was defeated both times. His name was presented by the Republican convention of Kentucky for Vice President of the United States in 1872. He was a member of the Louisiana Commission in 1877, and was one of the arbitrators on the Bering Sea who met in Paris in 1893. He has reached the age for retirement from the bench at any time he so desires.

Another prominent Republican who is a native of Kentucky is John W. Yerkes, United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue since 1900. He was born at Lexington in 1854 and was a son of the Rev. Stephen Y. Yerkes. He was graduated from Centre College in 1873 and took the law course at the University of Michigan. He was married in October, 1876, to Miss Elizabeth Owsley Anderson. He has graced many appointive positions in Kentucky and elsewhere. He was Register in Bankruptcy in 1873; Master in Chancery, 1887-92; chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, 1891-96; Commissioner to the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago; Republican nominee for Governor of Kentucky in 1900; Collector of Internal Revenue at Danville in 1897. He is widely known as one of the Big Four in the distribution of Federal patronage in Kentucky.

FIVE KENTUCKIANS WHO ARE IN THE U. S. SENATE.

Kentuckian and has accepted the Home Coming invitation.

* * *

Enthusiastic Acceptance.

Capt. C. C. Calhoun, of Washington, senior member of the firm of attorneys of Calhoun & Siver, was enthusiastic in his reception of the invitation. He came into prominence through his successful efforts to collect nearly a million dollars for the Kentucky soldiers in the war with Spain.

"I still live in old Kentucky," he writes, "no matter where I may be spending my time."

Miss Mary Desha, recording secretary general of the D. A. R., who with Ellen Hardin Walworth, of Saratoga Springs, N. Y., also a Kentuckian, and one other, organized the society, wrote in acceptance of the invitation, suggesting that a Pocahontas Day be celebrated.

Delightful letters were received from Mrs. H. B. Cooke, of the Census office; C. M. Gilpin, of the Bureau of Pensions, and John A. Joyce, a poet of some note, who said that he would send a poem on Kentucky. Henry Livingston Godsey, superintendent of the stamp vault and secretary to several Congressmen at one time or another, was born at Hazel Green, Wolfe county, Sept. 15, 1869.

William F. Schooler, of Washington, writes:

Planning For Big Crowd.

"The Home Coming is looked forward to with great interest by all Kentuckians, many of whom have decided to attend the reunion." He is trying to arrange for a big crowd to come to the reunion.

Senator James C. McCreary has accepted the invitation to come to Louisville during Home Coming Week, and with Mrs. McCreary will take a prominent part in welcoming the returned wanderers. Although Senator McCreary lives at Richmond, he is rated as something of a wanderer.

Milo Shanks, secretary of the Republican Club of Washington, has written to the Commercial Club inclosing a list of the ex-Kentuckians, members of that organization, and invitations have been sent to them.

FLORIDA.

FORMER Kentucklans who have found temporary homes in Florida, are all mindful of their native State, and many of them have written in an enthusiastic strain to the Commercial Club. Mrs. E. A. Barnes, of Kissimmee, wrote:

"We have been in Florida twenty years now but we are still Kentucklans, the name of which is dear to our hearts." Mrs. Barnes sent lists of other ex-Kentucklans.

Miss L. E. Bryant, of Bowling Green, Fla., sent lists of those "who have wandered."

B. F. Dorsey, of McIntosh, sent names of a number of former Mt. Sterling people.

Miss Esther Bullock, of Live Oaks, sent names of former Kentuckians.

J. W. Brownfield, a former Hodgenville man, wrote an enthusiastic letter to the Larue county Herald.

G. T. Ayer, of the Board of Trade, of Dade City, a native of Daviess county, Ky., born near Owensboro, has accepted the Home-coming invitation.

* * *

Sending in Lists.

Morris G. Munn, president of the Commercial Club, of Lakeland, E. B. Leatherman, of Miami, Miss Okie Painter, Jacksonville, E. P. Rust, of Wauchula, and D. M. Rolfe, of the Navy Yard at Pensacola, all native Kentuckians, anxious to return, sent lists of those they knew as natives of the State.

The Rev. Charles H. Neal, secretary of the Board of Trade, of Hominy, accepted the invitation to the Home-coming and will return to the old soil."

Mrs. Jay C. Ross, of Tampa, has written to the Commercial Club, offering to organize a Kentucky Society in her city. There are a large number of ex-Kentuckians in Tampa who, Mrs. Ross believes, will come to Louisville for Home-coming Week in a body. Mrs Ross was Miss Sallie McKay, of Bardstown, and lived in Louisville several years as a teacher of music. She is composer of the march which was played as the battleship Kentucky was launched.

"Kentuckians living in the Southern States will be well represented in Louisville during Home-coming Week," writes Hugh B. Wright, of Pensacola, to R. S. Brown, chairman of the Committee on Arrangements. "It is with a great deal of pleasure I note in the daily papers that the Commercial Club is to have a Home-coming for Kentuckians in Louisville in June. Nothing could be prouder than I that he was bred and reared in God's chosen land, and I hope that it will be my good fortune to be able to be on hand at the appointed time for this Kentucky love feast. This Home-coming should, and I know will, be a great deal more of a source of pleasure to us who have wandered away than anything else that can be well imagined. My business carries me over the southern part of Alabama and the greater part of Florida and if, in moving about, I can be of any assistance to you in helping the movement along, I shall be only too glad to do so."

Editor George W. Wilson.

One of Kentucky's sons who has more than made good after leaving his native State to fight his way in life is George W. Wilson, editor-in-chief of the Times Union, of Jacksonville. Not only has he capably handled one of the best papers in the South, but he has enjoyed a public career of distinction. He was Commissioner at the Paris Exposition, a member of the World's State Fair Directory, of the Semi-Tropical Exposition and served as Collector of Internal Revenue for Florida under President Cleveland, and was for six years president of the Board of Trustees of the University of Florida. However, with all his successes in the land of oranges, Mr. Wilson has never forgotten his old Kentucky home, and his letter of acceptance of the invitation to Home-coming Week is one of the most enthusiastic and inspiring yet received.

"Will I come to the Home-coming?" he writes. "I certainly shall, even if the walking should be bad. Indeed, a great idea—great help—this Home-coming plan, and when we get back to the most holy of soils, what a frolic we shall have. We intend showing you what Kentucky patriotism is. Many of us who have carved a little furrow in the world and who have been from the mother for a generation love the memory of the cradle yet warm in our old hearts. I have met Kentuckians in all parts of the world, and that remarkable spark of patriotism is still burning within them. Indeed, it is a remarkable psychological mystery that Kentuckians should have such a zealous love far and above the natives of any other State. When a Kentuckian meets a Kentuckian, a fraternity at once springs up that is just a little short of Masonic brotherhood. Who can explain the reason for this? I am coming, suh."

GEORGIA.

A PRETTY good sample of the way the ex-Kentuckians who have become established in Georgia feel about their invitations to the Home-coming is expressed in the letter written by Dr. John W. Phelps, of Atlanta.

"It beats strong in my heart," he writes, "the feeling that I would be glad to be with you in Home-coming Week."

One of the many residents of other States who spent a considerable part of their lives in Kentucky, and who are under the impression that because they were not born in this State they are not eligible to the Home-coming, is the Rev. Samuel J. Pinkerton, of Augusta. He wrote to R. S. Brown, chairman of the committee, as follows:

"It appears from a notice I have received that my name has been sent you as one who claims Kentucky as his native State. That was an error. I was not born in Kentucky, but I fortunately lived in that dear old Commonwealth for a good many years and am attached to it by many ties. I greatly wish it was my privilege to witness the scene when the home-comers shall have met in your old town. My heart will be there in any event."

Mr. Pinkerton has been informed that all persons who have lived in Kentucky long enough to have become identified with it are invited just as cordially as those who are natives of the State.

R. W. Geiger, of Atlanta, wrote the second time to the Commercial Club asking that his daughter, Mrs. John C. Knapp, who was Miss Margaret C. Geiger, now of Orange, N. J., be invited to the Home-coming. His first letter had been lost. Mrs. Knapp is a native of Louisville and was born in the Galt House.

John T. Hern, of Victory, has accepted an invitation to the Home-coming. He was born in Shelby county and was the founder of the Shelby Sentinel. Later he established the Knoxville Daily Sentinel, now one of the leading daily papers of the State. He and Mrs. Hern will attend the reunion.

IDAHO.

FEW, indeed, are the Kentuckians who have taken up their abode in Idaho, at least so far as the letters on file in the office of the Commercial Club show. So few, in fact, were the letters received from that part of the country that the club devoted only one file to the three States of Idaho, Nevada and Utah, and that file has scarcely anything in it.

One of the correspondents, Chasteen Dunavan, of Murray, is a candidate for the longest away prize. He was born at Elizabethtown in March, 1847, and left Kentucky thirty-two years ago. He volunteered in Capt. W. Brannon's company in Louisville for the Mexican War.

J. M. Hampton, of Boise, is a native of Hardin county, and with Mrs. Hampton, who is a Kentuckian, is anxious to return to the old home again. He sent lists of names to the Commercial Club.

C. W. Lee asked for invitations for himself and the other four members of his family, all of whom are natives of Kentucky. They are living at Troy.

L. W. Boone, of Caldwell, is a great-grandson of the Kentucky pioneer, and has in his possession the Boone family Bible and many other relics of the first Kentuckian. Mr. Boone, like his ancestor, is a great marksman and is noted throughout Idaho for his ability in handling a rifle. In his life in the great West he has shown much of the same characteristic energy and self-reliance that his famous progenitor showed in Kentucky in the Eighteenth century. Mr. Boone has been invited to Home-coming and will probably accept.

INDIANA.

INDIANA and Kentucky, separated only by the Ohio, have exchanged thousands of natives, those of one State attaining to more or less prominence in another. Many of those who do their work in Kentucky have a home-coming every day and, although there will be thousands of ex-Kentuckians who live now in Indiana to come to Louisville and to the State for Home-coming Week, they are such a short distance away that it will be nothing like the trip that others in other parts of the country will have to do.

James Whitcomb Riley has been asked to grace the Home-coming festival with his presence. It is true that he is not a Kentuckian, but that is his misfortune, not his fault, and the Commercial Club is willing to overlook a little technicality like that in his case.

* * *

A Kentucky Poet.

Indiana, however, has a poet who is a native-born Kentuckian. He is Dr. Hubbard Madison Smith, of Vincennes. His father and grandfather and his mother and grandmother were all Kentuckians, and although he has been away from his native State for nearly half a century he has fond recollections of his early days. This bard, in writing to the Commercial Club, said he was "inspired with a poem." The poem is of several stanzas' duration, with a chorus. It starts off as follows:

My boyhood's home is far away
Where verdure fresh and genial skies
Make gladsome all the hours of day,
And with each morn bring sweet surprise.

There mem'ry turns and once again
I hear its birds and see its flowers,
As on the ear a sweet refrain

Chorus—

In beauty other climes appear
And friends I find where'er I roam,
But nome to me are half so dear
As was my old Kentucky home.

"It makes my old heart leap with joy at the thought of meeting my old Kentucky kin and friends of long years ago at the grand jubilee in June at my native city, Louisville," writes Norborne M. Booth, of Evansville. He was born on Bear Grass creek in Louisville Sept. 7, 1822, and thanks God that he is still able to hunt up the corn crackers of Evansville. He has organized a Kentucky Club in Evansville, and will endeavor to prevail upon a large number of them to attend the Home Coming. Mr. Booth is an old telegraph operator and made his "first dot" in the old No. 8 station, Ohio Telegraph Company, Third avenue, between Main and Market streets.

James H. Edleman, of Sulphur Springs, named by the father of "Coin" Harvey, was born near Lexington, and has been away from Kentucky for sixty-nine years. He inclosed a long list of Kentucklans-across-the-river. He writes that he has "never smoked a cigar or a pipe of tobacco or taken a chew of tobacco" in his life, but he is "a good Kentuckian" for all that.

Thomas M. Morgan, editor of the Argus Enterprise, of Thornton, writes:

"I am a native of the dear old State, and the very name, 'Kentucky,' has a charm for me, so send along your notices, I will boom old Kentucky to the limit of my circulation."

Mrs. Alice Ridly, of Laconia, who will be in Louisville during Home-coming Week, is a great-granddaughter of Daniel Boone. Mrs. Ridly's maiden name was Miss Alice M. Holliday.

"Will I? Well, I guess so."

That was from M. LeRoy Staadeker, an old Louisville boy, now managing editor of the Terre Haute Star, in the shape of a telegram on receipt of his invitation to Louisville for Home-coming Week. Mr. Staadeker was well-known in newspaper circles in Louisville.

Robert Snider, Terre Haute, and his twin brother, of the same city, hope to win jointly the prize offered for the Kentuckian who has been longest away from his native State. The twins were born September 24, 1850, and were taken by their parents to Indiana on October 10, 1853, where they have lived continuously since. Messrs. Snider expect to come to Home-coming Week together and hope that fifty-three years' absence will entitle them to the prize for being longest away from the State of their birth.

Mrs. Mollie Gaines Clore, of Waveland, writes:

"I intend to be present with the ex-Kentuckians in June, Home-coming Week. I have been absent from the State twenty-five years, but am still a loyal friend to the Bluegrass State, the land I love the best."

Mrs. C. H. Suttle, of Columbia City, in writing for an invitation to the Home-coming, says that she wants to come to Louisville and "help celebrate."

Mrs. Ella M. Holmes, of Kempton, writes:

"I have read of the Home-coming planned by the Commercial Club and I must say it is a delightful plan—truly typical of Kentucky. As a former Kentuckian, I want to ask you for an invitation."

Dr. Milton H. Humston, of Goodland, a surgeon of no little reputation, who was born in Louisville, November 3, 1828, has accepted an invitation to the Home-coming. He is a graduate of the University of Louisville.

W. A. O'Hair, of Greencastle, is another ex-Kentuckian who will enter for the "longest-away" prize. He was born in Estill county, January 8, 1826, and at the age of three years he was taken away by his parents who settled in the woods in Indiana. He is the oldest one of a family of twelve and expected to be a homecomer.

Frank McNeill, of the National Millitary Home of Indiana, is a native Kentuckian and is anxious to participate in the Home-coming festivities. He has sent many names to the Commercial Club.

Thomas B. Moore, of Wabash, has written for an invitation. He is a son of James Milton Moore, formerly of Louisville and was born here in 1838, at Twelfth and Jefferson streets. The family left Louisville in 1885.

F. M. Van Pelt, of Anderson, a distant relative of Stephens Collins Foster, has written for an invitation. He is a magistrate at Anderson.

ILLINOIS.

ILLINOIS, with its Chicago and other cities, is the abiding place of a great many Kentuckians, who have helped largely to make that State what it is, according to one of them.

Eager To Help the Cause.

J. Dudley Henriott, of Mahomet, has not been in Kentucky for fifty-three years. He is eighty years of age, and was born near Georgetown. He asks what he can do to help the cause and sends a list of names of former Kentuckians.

Washington Dunbar, of Galva, is another "longest-away" Kentuckian. He writes:

"I was born in Breckinridge county, near Hardinsburg, September 21, 1822; came from there to Illinois with my parents when I was about eleven years old. We came in wagons, one drawn by an ox-team and one by horses. I am a farmer and have lived at my present home for over fifty years." Mr. Dunbar sent the names of two children whom he would like to have invited.

Daniel Murphy, of Lovington, left Kentucky in 1834 and has been back only once. He is eighty-two years of age and was born in Mason county. He has accepted the invitation to the Home-coming.

H. D. McClure, of Downs, has forwarded to the Commercial Club the names of forty-five ex-Kentuckians living in that place, with the request that they be invited to the reunion.

* * *

Adlai E. Stevenson.

From Bloomington will come Adlai E. Stevenson, the greatest of the great ex-Kentuckians in Illinois. He has accepted the invitation of the Commercial Club to attend the festival and will be one of the leading speakers.

Although he has been in Kentucky many times since he first left the State with his parents in 1852, he has been a resident of Illinois almost long enough to make him no mean candidate for the "longest away" prize. He was born in Christian county, October 23, 1835, and went with his parents to Bloomington, Ill., at the age of seventeen years. His academic education he received in the common schools and at Center College, from which, however, he was not graduated. He studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1857. He was Master in Chancery from 1860 to 1864 and was a member of Congress from 1884 to 1892.

From 1885 to 1889 he served as First Assistant Postmaster General of the United States. After the term of Vice President he was appointed, in 1897, as a member of the commission to Europe to try to secure international bimetallism. He was nominated for the vice presidency with Bryan in the campaign of 1900.

An interesting family reunion during Home-coming Week will be that of Prof. J. Herson MacDonald, of Athens, and his brother, who lives in Warren county, Ky. They were separated in infancy, one being four years of age and the other three months. After forty-three years they met by accident last July by accident and learned of their relationship. Prof. MacDonald intends to come to Louisville for Home-coming Week, where he will be met by his brother, and the two will go to the old family home in Warren county.

Daniel Boone Descendant.

Nathan Boone Craig, a great-grandchild of Daniel Boone, has written from Hanover, that he intends coming to Louisville for the Home-coming. Mr. Craig is now eighty-four years of age but he is strong and in good health and believes that he will be able to make the trip to Louisville in June. He is a son of James Craig and his mother was a daughter of Nathan Boone. He was born in St. Charles, Mo., in the old home that Daniel Boone built and lived in for several years. When Mr. Craig was two years of age, his grandfather, Nathan Boone and Mr. and Mrs. Craig removed to Illinois, where he has lived ever since. He believes that he is the nearest living relative to Daniel Boone, and that if he comes to Louisville he will undoubtedly get the prize offered.

A. H. Harrod, of St. Augustine, who expects to attend Home-coming Week, writes that he is the youngest son of William Harrod, who was the first white child born in Louisville, the date being May 22, 1779. His uncle, Col. James Harrod, was the founder of Harrodsburg. Mr. Harrod is now seventy-five years of age.

David Peter Landes, who expects to come to Louisville Home-coming Week, has not been to Kentucky since his father removed to Illinois in October, 1834, nearly seventy-two years ago. Mr. Landes was born in Muhlenberg county and was but two years of age at the time of his father's removal from the State. He expects to enter for the prize offered for the Kentuckian who has been longest absent from the State, and stands an excellent chance of winning it.

The Rev. J. E. Masters, pastor of the Christian church of Dorchester, has been a non-resident of Kentucky for fifty years without setting foot within its borders. He was born and reared near Covington and left the Commonwealth in his nineteenth year.

Dr. J. R. Baker, of Harrisburg, writes:

"I am a fullblooded Kentuckian and will certainly take the trip. I was born and raised near Dixon and Webster counties. Have been in Illinois since 1847."

Will F. Jordan, president of the St. Clair County Press Club, Belleville, writes for an invitation to Home-coming Week and says:

"Louisville is my old home—been away fifteen years—and I would love to be with you in June. I append a list of the names of some of the old boys you also remember."

P. F. Brown, president of the Galesburg Bank, of Galesburg, writes:

"Unless something big happens, I shall be there. Thanks. Yours for Kentucky."

Dr. J. G. Allen, of Edgewood, writes: "Once a Kentuckian, always a Kentuckian. I am a resident of Illinois but I am still a Kentuckian."

J. H. Ladd, County Treasurer and Supervisor of Assessments, of Greenville, has sent several lists of names of former Kentuckians. He is enthusiastic about the project.

Mrs. C. E. Aldrich, of Elgin, writes:

"I send you my name and three others and we will all be there during Home-coming Week. It should be a great success."

Another strong candidate from Illinois for the "longest-away" prize is entered in the person of Leonard Rush, of Assumption. His daughter, Mrs. Claude Blankenbaker, has written that her father is very anxious to attend the Home-coming, and though he is a very old and feeble man, he will come if his health permits it. Mr. Rush left his home in Barren county seventy-two years ago.

Walter B. Phister, formerly of Louisville, now of Chicago, has sent several long lists of ex-Kentuckians living in that city. He is enthusiastic in the prospects for the success of the Home-coming, and has accepted an invitation to attend.

Mrs. E. E. Bradburn, of Pittsfield, Pike county, Ill., has accepted an invitation to attend the Home-coming. Her husband, Mark Bradburn, is State's Attorney for the county.

Dr. John Bartlett, an author and lecturer of note, was born in Louisville almost seventy-five years ago, and left the city in 1858. He is connected with some of the best families in the State.

Mrs. J. W. Burnett, of Morrison, is a native of Bath county, and was a Miss Kenney. She is heartily in favor of the Home-coming plans, and will come to Louisville determined to meet and thank every member of the Commercial Club.

Mrs. Lucy Morris Brennon, of Mt. Carmel, is a native of Hopkins county, and left Kentucky in 1846. She sent in a list of names.

S. G. Cartright, of Bible Grove, was born in Hardin county in 1844, and left the State in 1848. He hopes to be able to be a homecomer, and will enter for the "longest-away" prize. He sent a list of wandered Kentuckians.

Samuel C. Dayton, Police Judge of Flora, has accepted an invitation to the Home-coming. He was a native of Campbell county and as a Confederate soldier served in Company F, Fortieth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

A Fast-Beating Heart.

"My heart beat triple strokes for a few moments, when I received your invitation," wrote Mrs. George Fax, of Chapin, in response to an invitation. Mrs. Fax was born in Louisville fifty-six years ago, and left here soon after the war. She said that she believed she could renew her youth by a good many years by returning for a week. She sent a list of former Kentuckians.

Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Hunt and daughter, Miss Patricia Maria Hunt, of Decatur, have written for invitations to the Home-coming. Mr. Hunt was in business in Louisville until 1882.

"I am a Kentuckian; shore be there right side up with care," writes J. H. Hubble, of Alsey. He is solicitor for the Orange-Judd Farmer, and offered to solicit for the Commercial Club.

Dr. James Whitney Hall, the Hon. Joseph B. Daniel, Thomas J. McNeill and Rivers McNeill, of the Iroquois Club, Chicago, have expressed their interest in the Home-coming and their determination to be on hand.

Dr. W. S. D. Johnson, of Versailles, has accepted the invitation to the Home-coming. He was born in Scott county, January 15, 1824, and went from this State to Missouri in 1828. He practiced medicine in Lewis county for fifty-five years, and went to Versailles in 1903. He will be another "longest-away" candidate.

* * *

An Ever-Verdant Product.

James Knox Lambert, an attorney of Chicago, has asked for an invitation to the Home-coming. He is "from the green fields of the Pennyroyal district," and is "one of their ever-verdant products."

A. Flower, of Mt. Carmel, sent six names to the Commercial Club, members of his family situated in all parts of the country. He hopes that his family will be able to hold a family reunion at the Home-coming. They were all born and reared in Kentucky.

IOWA.

THE Iowa Kentuckians were the enthusiasts to take rank above the others who wrote to the Commercial Club. Many of those who wrote have been away from the State for long years, and will be unable to attend the Home-coming, but express their determination to get vicarious joy out of the reunion. The time and the harvests will prevent lots of them from getting back.

M. H. Wilson, of Logan, born near Munfordsville, September 23, 1835, and left the State in 1850, writes a letter that rejoices the Home-coming people.

"I love old Kentucky, the home of fair women and brave men, fine horses and good whisky. I guess I had better ring off. I am coming back if I have to walk down and back."

* * *

After One of the Prizes.

Few of the former Kentuckians who attend the big reunion will have an opportunity to win more than one of the prizes offered by the Commercial Club, but Mrs. James VanWinkle, of Eldon, who will probably be one of the guests of the State in June, will prove a formidable candidate in two instances. She was Miss Letta Jand Davis, and was born in Kentucky in 1838. She is now nearing sixty-eight years of age. Her parents moved West when she was less than a year old, putting her in line to win the prize given to the person who left the State at an earliest age, and who has never been back to the State since that time. An absence of sixty-seven years from the State is one that few Kentuckians will admit, and Mrs. VanWinkle may have the distinction of winning two of the prizes. Her brother, Jasper Davis, is now president of the Board of Trade of Hanny, Ore., and he has written that he intends to meet his sister in Louisville at the reunion.

Miss Samaria M. Durham, of Exira, has written for information as to the prizes to those who have been longest away. She inclosed a poem she had written on a religious subject, and asked if she should write one about Home-coming. She can write on any subject almost, she said.

James T. Baron, of Derby, sent a list of names of Kentucklans, and said that he was sorry the farmers could not attend. The time set, he said, is an effectual bar. Lists of Kentucky names were received from Mrs. M. E. Fidler, of Des Moines; from M. J. Gleason, of Keokuk; Bessie Garber, of Leon, and from James M. Hart, of Council Bluffs, all of them natives of Kentucky.

* * *

An Aged Veteran.

W. I. Garat, of Council Bluffs, was born April 30, 1826, in Kentucky, and was a son of Benjamin N. Garat. He was taken when four years of age to Illinois, but now lives in Iowa. He is a veteran of the Union army of the Civil War, and is so aged that he can scarcely write.

Mrs. Francis C. Shaw, of Richmond, wrote to the Commercial Club to ask if it would be all right for her husband to attend, if he was born in New York. In response to her letter Mr. Hughes wrote that it was her husband's misfortune and not his fault that he was not born in Kentucky, and that he would be welcomed as a son-in-law.

"My heart beats for the grand old State and my boyhood home," writes L. T. Griffin, of Algona. "I left the State with my parents in 1875. Best wishes for all."

INDIAN TERRITORY.

STRANGE as it may seem Indian Territory, with all its ex-Kentucklans, has not sent many letters to the Commercial Club and in most of those that have been received there are queries about "railroad rates to pilgrims." A chief source of complaint is the date of the Home-coming. Many of the Kentuckians in Indian Territory are tillers of the soil and the second week in June will see their harvest begun. Most of the letters have something to say about its being a poor time for the farmer, whose year's work will depend largely on his activity at that time. Some of the old Kentuckians there, however, are shining exceptions to the rule.

S. D. Slaughter, of Muskogee, writes: "I am an old Confederate soldier from old Kentucky, and the dear old State will always hold a sacred spot in my heart. I have been to most all the reunions and hope to be with you at the Home-coming meeting." He inclosed lists of names.

Nat Henderson, of Purcell, writes: "A number of Kentuckians have been in to get information concerning the Home-coming in June. There are quite a lot of us around here and all are making arrangements to come. I am proud to see my old State making such a move."

W. G. Lutherlank, of Muskogee, hails "from God's State," and hopes to be present at the Home-coming. He was born at Winchester, Clark county, and left the State in 1892.

Dr. J. H. Crouch, of Tuttle, wrote to the Commercial Club that he was born and reared in Gallatin county and that they could "count on him" attending the Home-coming.

M. S. Gammon, of Tussy, wrote that the country is full of "Bluegrass boys," and that he would bring all he could with him.

James T. Burns, of the National License office, of the Chickasaw Nation, formerly of Louisville, sent lists of names of ex-Kentuckians, as did R. E. Bowling, of Lindsay, and W. G. Powell, of Holdenville.

KANSAS.

THE chief executive of the State of Kansas, Edward E. Hoch, who will head the delegation of Kansas Kentuckians who will attend the Home-coming, is one of the sons of the State who have achieved places of greatness since leaving the land of their birth. Gov. Hoch was born in Danville, and received a part of his education in Kentucky. He writes to the Commercial Club as follows, under the date of March 28:

"I find among my unanswered letters one from you asking for a photograph of myself. I am sending one under separate cover by this mail.

"I am looking forward to Home-coming Week with much pleasure, at which time I hope to grasp the hands of many of my boyhood friends. Cordially yours, E. W. HOCH."

After an absence of thirty-eight years from Kentucky, J. R. Merideth, of Lecompton, intends to visit the State of his birth during Home-coming Week. He writes that there are a large number of former Kentuckians living in his city, and that a party of ten or fifteen will probably come to the reunion.

* * *

To Prepare a Register.

J. K. Mitchell, of Osborne, writes to Mr. Hughes:

"I expect to prepare a register of the names of all Kentuckians in this county. There are a number here. I am a native Kentuckian, and I expect to be with you in June. I cannot trace any relationship to Daniel Boone, but my father was first cousin to Thomas Howell Crawford, at one time Mayor of the city of Louisville. My paternal grandmother was a sister of the Hon. A. T. Crawford's father. At any event, I want one of those unique invitations, but I am coming whether I get it or not if I am well enough at the time and have the wherewithal.

Joseph Todd, of Wyandotte, has written that he intends to take advantage of the Home-coming Week to meet his friends and visit his native heath in Adair county, which he has not seen for years.

"The Kentuckians here are nearly all my friends, and they are good ones," writes J. W. Morphy, publisher of the Russel Reform, of Russell. "It may interest the people of Kentucky to know that almost all are prosperous and large land owners in our county. The home-coming plan is a most happy one, though from Iowa, myself, the proposition interests me because I have so many friends from Kentucky."

William E. Connelley, of Topeka, writes:

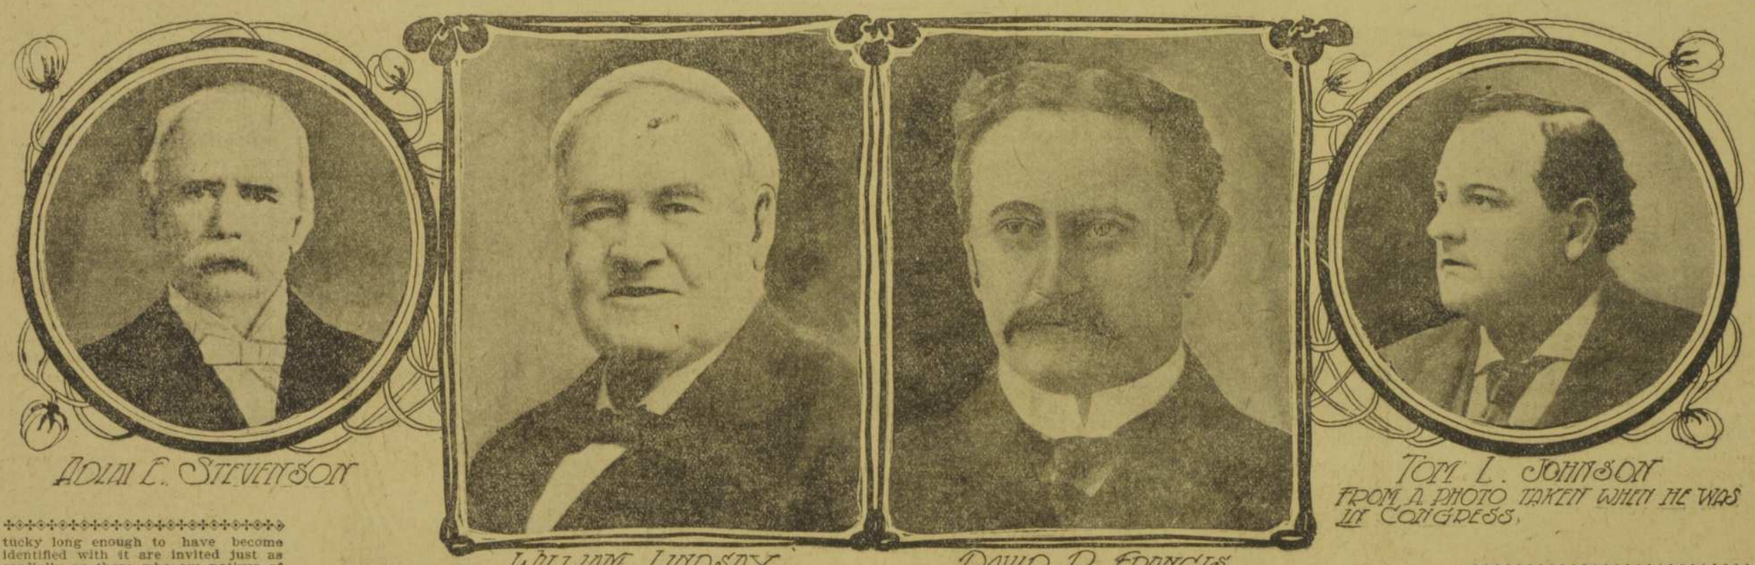

"What about this home-coming? I meet Kentucklans at every turn. And I have met them in Washington, Oregon, Idaho, California, Texas, on the scorched plains of Arizona, on the wastes of New Mexico, in the Rockies of Colorado and Wyoming, on the great Plains, in all the States of the Ohio valley, in the Appalachians and on the rivers that run from them into the sea; and I have found them holding their own in every instance, far ahead in other instances; good citizens and in other instances every time. This includes the 'Bluegrass man, sah,' the dwellers in the quagmires along the Mississippi, and the mountaineer. And I must say that the mountaineer is the most successful of the lot; he is the best mixer, the shrewdest politician, the keenest business man of the whole outfit; and this is not casting reflections on the others, for they are all superior. When they meet in foreign States they are the most fraternal of people, whether from mountain or the 'good whisky' part of the State. I have known a mountaineer to make sacrifices of every kind for a man from the 'fast horse' part of the State, and after he had him on his feet joke him for pretending to belong to an aristocracy founded on stallion fees. So, I am in favor of getting together. Perhaps we can be able to knock enough gumption into the heads of those remaining there to induce them to make an effort to put Kentucky up somewhere near where she ought to be."

Newton, in writing to accept an invitation for Home-coming Week, says that the former Kentuckians of Newton and Wichita are considering chartering a special car, and that they will probably come to Louisville for Home-coming Week in a body.

Mrs. Sarah J. Grady, of Wathena, who is now seventy-five years old, was born in Elizabethtown, Ky., and left the State in the fall of 1844. She has not been in Kentucky, now, for more than sixty-one years.

William J. Tuttle, of Leavenworth, writes:

"I am a son of Thomas Jefferson Tuttle, one of the first settlers in Laurel county; I am department commander of the United Spanish War Veterans for the Department of Kansas; I am by profession a school teacher, principal of the schools of Ft. Leavenworth. It will be the time of my life to see the old-timers."

Success has come to D. L. Buckles, a former Kentuckian, who is now proprietor of the Rose Valley Wheat and Stock Farm, near St. John. In accepting an invitation for Home-coming Week, he writes:

"I was born and reared near Sonora. I left there when only seventeen years old and am now forty-five years old. When I left I borrowed enough money to leave on, now I have a farm of 800 acres in the great wheat belt of Kansas, and not a single dollar against it. Everything is lovely and the goose hangs high, but I still love that old State of Kentucky and her people. There are no others like them to me, and I hope some day to make Kentucky my home."

J. Barrickman, of Humboldt, writes:

"I have just read of your proposal to have the Home-coming for all Kentuckians. Good. I have been away for twenty-five years, but there is no State like 'Old Kaintuck' and no song like 'My Old Kentucky Home.' I sho' will be there."

A Kansas Delegation.

Judge V. H. Grinstead, of Larned, who was formerly a Judge of the District Court of Kansas, has written that a delegation will come from his little city for Home-coming Week. Judge Grinstead says there are probably seventy-five former Kentuckians in Larned, and that much interest in the reunion has been awakened.

R. E. Carlton, of Pittsburg, is arranging for the accommodation of a large party from his city during Home-coming Week. The former Kentuckians of Pittsburg have determined to come to Louisville for Home-coming Week, in June, in a body, and will probably secure a special car.

C. C. Friend, of Denton county, left Larue county twenty-four years ago for Kansas, and has written:

"I hope to receive an invitation for Home-coming Week, and expect that the majority of my family of nine may be present."

One of the prettiest expressions of the sentiment which all "exiled" Kentuckians feel is contained in the letter from Mrs. Nannie Beauchamp Jones, of Baxter Springs, who writes:

"How I wish I could say positively that I will be there. Going home to Kaintucky! I wonder if you yourselves know the meaning of those words? Not unless you have been away from the dear homeland many long years, as I have been. Going home—to look once more upon the beech-crowned hills of old Kentucky, to smell the pennyroyal growing on the hillside, to visit the dear old home and the old log schoolhouse, to drink from the spring at the foot of the hill; yes, and from a gourd, too. I wonder if the negro cabins are yet standing as they were in the long ago when I was a tiny child?"

James A. Ray, an attorney of Wichita, was born and reared in Bowling Green, and has been twice Judge of the Circuit Court of Kansas. He is an attorney of note. He left Kentucky in 1883, but will probably be in Louisville for the Home-coming.

Mrs. G. M. Binns, of Baxter Springs, has written to ask if it is true that there is to be a Home-coming. She and Mrs. Nannie B. Jones, of the same town, both native Kentuckians, have organized a "We-Two Kentucky Club," and are scouring the country for names of exiles.

LOUISIANA.

THERE have been only a few Louisiana Kentuckians write either to accept invitations or to ask them, for Louisiana has no more than its share of them. Most of the communications have had to do with the sending of lists of names and the inquiries as to the nature of the festival.

Wesley Williams, formerly of Shelby county, now of New Orleans, has sent a list of twenty-five names of former Kentuckians now living in the South. Lists have also been sent by J. Bre Young, J. M. Wire, of Estherwood; H. C. Glasgow, of Crowley, formerly of Logan county; Mrs. Sudie George, of Jennings; W. C. Carleton, of New Orleans, and others.

C. L. Abell and family, of Welsh, formerly citizens of Hardin county, have been away from Kentucky for three years and want to return for the Home-coming.

J. T. Moseley, secretary and treasurer of the Southern Land, Loan and Insurance Company, of Bastrop, is another native of Kentucky who has made his mark. He and his wife are anxious to return to the "grand old commonwealth and her noble people."

MAINE.

THE Pine Tree State has only eighty Kentuckians inside its boundaries and none of these have seen fit to write to the Commercial Club about the Home-coming. Letters to the mayors of the different cities of Maine have received no more than courteous attention.

MARYLAND.

MARYLAND has only a very few Kentuckians, although among them are some that are more than prominent. Few of them have written letters to the Commercial Club.

Harry Allmond, who is remembered in Louisville by a wide circle of friends, and who is now holding an important position with an insurance company in Baltimore, in accepting an invitation to Home-coming Week, writes:

"I desire to thank you, and through you the hundreds of members of the Commercial Club with whom I am personally acquainted, for the invitation to Home-coming for Kentucky, to be held in dear old Louisville June next, and to say that nothing would give me more pleasure than to be able to assure you at this writing that I could return to my old Kentucky home at that time. For Louisville is still home to me. I always refer to her as such, although my future life will doubtless be lived out in this part of the country. If it is at all possible for me to come 'home' in June, I will certainly do so. I am inclosing herewith the names of a number of Kentuckians who are residing in this city, and to whom you may send invitations."

Mrs. Virginia Taylor Randall, of Annapolis, was born in Jefferson county, near Louisville, in 1818, and left Kentucky in 1848. Her son, Alexander Burton Randall, was born in Kentucky. She expressed her great sorrow that her acknowledgment of the invitation was not an acceptance, but said that she feared, because of her advanced age, she could not get to Louisville in June. Mr. Hughes, in answering her, urged that she should try to come if possible, and said they could safely offer her a medal.

MASSACHUSETTS.

MASSACHUSETTS is almost as sparsely settled with Kentuckians as the other New England States. In all New England there are 222 negroes from Kentucky and all of these but one live in Boston. The total number of Kentuckians in Massachusetts is 1,021. Some of them, however, are much interested in the Home-coming project and have written to the Commercial Club about it. The members of the club have greatly benefited by the suggestions given them by officers of the Home-coming Associations of New England.

One of the seventeen native-born Kentuckians now residents of Lynn is Dr. Joseph Haydon Smith, who writes:

"I was born in Louisville on September 10, 1849. My father was a professor of music at the Institution for the Blind. He was blind himself and was also organist at the Unitarian church of which the Rev. Dr. John H. Heywood was pastor. Victor Newcomb was one of my schoolmates, and I have many tender recollections of old Kentucky."

Edward T. Lincoln, who formerly lived in Louisville, and who has many friends and relatives in this city, has written to the Commercial Club from Somerville, inclosing the names of eleven former Kentuckians in New England. Mr. Lincoln believes there will be a large-sized delegation to the Home-coming.

MICHIGAN.

MICHIGAN was not as fortunate as some of the other States in drawing Kentuckians inside her borders, although she has not a few. One of the many Mayors who was born in Kentucky is John F. Bible, now Chief Executive of the city of Ionia. Mr. Bible lived in Owensboro until 1892 and married a Kentucky girl from Hopkinsville. Mr. Bible is well acquainted with many of Louisville's business men and will certainly be here during Home-coming Week. He went to Ionia, where he founded the Ionia Wagon Works, of which he is president. He was manager of the Owensboro Wagon Works for many years.

Mrs. Mary Stuart Huff, of Constantine, writes:

"I notice by the Chicago papers there is to be a Kentucky Home-coming Week next June under the auspices of the Commercial Club and that you will send an invitation. Does this include the gentler sex? If it does, I beg leave to say I was born and reared in Louisville and have ever been proud of the fact. I was married in Christ Church Cathedral by the Rev. James Craik. I have lived away many years, but my heart goes back to the home of my youth and I want to see the old place once more. I have not been back since 1891."

R. A. O'Neal, of Detroit, is a native of Kenton county and lived for some time at Louisville. He has written for an invitation.

MINNESOTA.

MINNESOTA has not been chosen by very many of the ex-Kentuckians as their place of residence, but those who live there are proving to be good Kentuckians and many have written for an invitation. As was written by T. L. Armstrong, of Minneapolis, who with Mrs. Armstrong is anxious to attend the Home-coming, they want an invitation.

"We want to come," he said, "but Kentuckians are not in the habit of visiting unless they have an invitation."

R. L. Bettis writes from Minneapolis:

"I have deferred answering your invitation waiting the outcome of the action of the Commercial Club of this city. The G. A. R. encampment is here this summer and the Commercial Club obtained possession of your invitation sent me and was so favorably impressed with the idea that I am now informed they intend arranging for something of a similar nature to be conducted during the encampment, though so far nothing has been made public in this conection. It is my intention to take advantage of the occasion and visit my mother. I inclose card of acceptance."

J. D. Morrell writes from Duluth:

"I feel honored to send my name with the assurance that I will be on hand during Home-coming Week. I am sure it will be a great success."

A. M. Morrison, proprietor of the Mankato Journal of Mankato, expects to be in Louisville during Home-coming Week. Mr. Morrison has written to the Commercial Club:

"My grandfather was in the battle of the River Raisin and my paternal grandmother was Poe's Lost Lenore, having been first engaged to him."

At St. Paul the Chief of Police, John J. O'Connor, a native Kentuckian, has a large family. Efforts are being made to get him to attend the reunion with Mrs. O'Connor and all the little O'Connors, who, though they were not all born in Kentucky, will be welcomed at the Home-coming.

W. H. Smallwood, a native of Elizabethtown, is now a leading attorney in Duluth. He has written enthusiastic letters to the Commercial Club and inclosed lists of names of former Kentuckians. He sent in the name of Beriah Magoffin, a son of Gov. Magoffin, now living at Duluth.

MISSISSIPPI.

THE Home-coming project was enthusiastically received by the Mississippi Kentuckians, at least those who wrote to the Commercial Club.

"Blessings be on the originator of the Home-coming," wrote Mrs. Lizzie W. Hancock Pack, of Hattiesburg, who wrote for invitations for herself and her family. She was born at Sulphur Springs, Ky., but has lived in Mississippi for the past ten years. Her father was William Hancock.

Mrs. W. C. Baggett, of Bethlehem, has written for invitations to the Home-coming for herself and Mr. Baggett. Her husband is a Georgian, but she wants him invited as a son-in-law.

John T. Buck, secretary of the Building and Loan Association of Jackson, was born while his parents, Kentuckians, were on a visit to relatives in Tennessee. Their home was in Kentucky and he makes his claim to nativity in the State. He was reared in Hopkinsville and entered the Confederate army from there, settling in Mississippi at the close of the war.

R. L. Bryant, of Selma, sends the names of his family, who were all born in Marion county, Ky., and asks that they receive invitations to the Home-coming.

Mrs. J. W. Henderson, a native of Paducah, now of Tunica, Miss., sent a list of names of Kentuckians, as did James D. Hines, of Jackson, who left Bowling Green a year ago. Miss S. Kilpwith, of Oxford, not a native of Kentucky, but a granddaughter of a Kentucky Governor, has asked if she may be sent an invitation.

MISSOURI.

MOST all Missourians are Kentuckians and almost every other man in that great daughter of the Commonwealth of Kentucky is a Henry Clay Somebody. The file devoted to letters from Missouri at the offices of the Commercial Club is jammed to the lid with letters, many of them correspondence gems. Here are extracts from a few:

T. J. Brown, an attorney of New Madrid, who was one of the Republican electors in 1904, writes:

"I was born in the grand old State and feel that nothing will or has given me the pleasure I will experience during Home-coming Week. I have been in Missouri only six years, and last year had the honor of being one of the eighteen Presidential electors, the first in thirty years Republican."

Mrs. Daisy Llewellyn Mattis has written from Mexico requesting an invitation for J. F. Llewellyn. He was born in Louisville at the corner of Third avenue and Chestnut street. He removed to Missouri in 1869, and settled at Mexico where he is one of the most prominent citizens. He is director of several of the Mexico banks and owns the best library in the county, and has a remarkably fine collection of coins. Mr. Llewellyn was a member of St. Paul's Episcopal church in Louisville.

Mrs. Henrietta A. Jenkins, of St. Louis, is a widow of Col. Walworth Jenkins, who was killed while performing his duties as Chief of Police of Louisville. Mrs. Jenkins and her children expect to come to Louisville for the Home-coming.

Gabe Reynolds, of Laflin, who was born in Warren county, Ky., will be reunited to his family after a period of about forty years as the result of Home-coming Week. When a mere boy he enlisted in the army and was never heard of afterward by his family, who supposed that he had been killed. A. L. Hightower, of Elkton, Ky., recently met him and asked that an invitation to the Home-coming be sent to him.

Mrs. John A. King, of St. Louis, a daughter of William Letcher, has accepted an invitation for Home-coming Week. Mrs. King is a niece of the Hon. Robert P. Letcher, who served fourteen years in Congress, was Minister to Mexico and Governor of Kentucky, and of Judge James Letcher, who was Judge of the Garrard County Court.

Mrs. M. E. Pell, of St. Louis, writes:

"Like all Kentuckians, I love my old State the best. No building on the World's Fair ground was so dear to me as the Kentucky building. Now if there is anything I can do to help I will do it. Send me name slips and I will see how many names I can get, as there is quite a number of Kentukians here in St. Louis. I was born and reared in Paducah; my husband was born in the same place. He died this last May."

Samuel J. Salyer, of Houston, writes:

"The good times you are planning for the absent Kentuckians are being discussed with much interest by those with whom I have talked. Let me have some of your literature that I may hand it around among the brethren. Unless cheap rates over the railroads are given some are proposing to drive through in wagons. The idea has created no small stir."

Dr. M. G. Hatcher, of St. Louis, and one of the charter members of the Kentucky Society of that city, has accepted an invitation for Home-coming Week.

* * *

James C. LeRoy, of DeSoto, writes:

"If all the absent ones feel as I do, you will have all you can take care of during Home-coming Week. I think Missouri alone will send 150,000, and I, for one, will give an extra 'hurrah' for the State when I can hear Mr. Watterson speak."

Among the more illustrious sons of Kentucky now resident in Missouri, and who will be in Louisville to participate in the festivities of Home-coming Week, are ex-Gov. Crittenden, of Kansas City, and Congressman Champ Clark, of Bowling Green. Both have accepted invitations to the Home-coming, and both are slated for addresses. Ex-Gov. Thomas Theodore Crittenden was born in Shelby county, Ky., January 2, 1832, and was the son of Henry Crittenden. He was educated at Cloverport and at Centre College, Danville, being graduated from the latter institution in 1855. He was married November 13, 1856, to Miss Carrie W. Jackson, of Frankfort. He was Lieutenant Colonel of the Seventh Missouri Cavalry from May, 1862, to the close of the war, being a prisoner of war from July to October, 1862. After the war he practiced law and filled an unexpired term as Attorney General of that State. He was a member of Congress from the Seventh district of Missouri from 1877 to 1881, and served for the four years that succeeded as Governor of that Commonwealth. He was Consul General at the City of Mexico from 1893 to 1897, since when he has been engaged in the practice of his profession in Kansas City. He is a member of the Constitutional Convention and has served several times as an arbitrator to settle strikes.

Congressman Champ Clark is known far and wide as an orator, and his name frequently appears in the newspapers as connected with some universally interesting event. He was born in Anderson county in March, 1850, and was educated in the common schools, the Kentucky University, at Bethany College and at the Cincinnati Law School. He was president of Marshall College, West Virginia, in 1873 and 1874. He has worked as a hired hand on a farm, as clerk in a country store, country newspaper editor and is a prominent lawyer. He was City Attorney of Louisiana, Mo., and later of Bowling Green, Mo.; has been presidential elector and member of Congress from the Ninth district of Missouri at two different times. He is a prominent and widely-quoted Democrat.

Mrs. Sallie T. McKinney, president of the Teachers' Club, of Kansas City, has written to the Commercial Club as follows:

"While not eligible myself to the Home-coming of the Kentuckians, I am the glad mother of a young daughter, Chastine McKinney, who is, and will be exceedingly gratified to receive an invitation. On both sides she comes from a long line of Kentucky ancestry that reaches back to the 'Dark and bloody days' of the State's history. She first saw the light near the famous Rolling spring of the southwestern part of the State in the old Kentucky home of her paternal ancestors. The same dear old mammy who had cared for her father before her and, believing that freedom was but a name, had steadfastly refused to leave the old 'Mars' and 'Mistis' so long as they lived, nursed and coddled her in her cradle. Through her mother she is descended on both sides from the best family of old Bourbon. The only mistake of her grandparents is their migration west in their early life, thereby handicapping their children's children in the matter of their nativity."

Henry M. Wheeler, of Columbia, which has been called "Little Kentucky," writes:

"As a native of the State of hospitality I want to list my name with the old Home-comers, and to be able to swell the crowd with the greatest people on earth."

Mrs. Annie Baugh, who left Kentucky in 1849 and has never returned, writes that she intends to be present at the Home-coming, and says:

"Oh, how I will enjoy attending the meeting. I have not been to Kentucky since I moved West in 1849. I am now seventy-two years old, but know I will enjoy the meeting."

Dr. J. F. Spangler, of St. Louis, writes:

"We, Dr. J. F. Spangler and family, are true Kentuckians, dyed in the wool. We are all up in arms to come to Kentucky and will expect a special invitation."

Grundy Young, Sr., of Kansas City, left Kentucky thirty-seven years ago for Missouri. He has written that he intends to come to the Home-coming, and says:

"Though it has been thirty-seven years since I was in Kentucky, I still love my native State."

"The last census shows 88,241 native born Kentuckians in the State of Missouri," writes J. W. Long, of Bethany, "but I know there are at least 88,243, as there are two of us here now who were not here when the count was made, but who would like to be numbered among the blessed next June."

Mrs. Julia Cohen Klass, of Columbia, has written to the Commercial Club:

"We have a Kentucky Woman's Club which has the distinction of being the only (exclusive) Kentucky Woman's Club in America. I will be glad to send you the names of these members. This little city and county have many loyal native Kentuckians who will probably take advantage of the occasion to have a reunion with their old friends."

H. T. Bradley is trying to arrange for a special car to bring the former Kentuckians of Pattonsburg and vicinity to Louisville for Home-coming Week. Mr. Bradley was formerly Mayor of Pattonsburg and is one of the leading citizens in that part of the State.

Prof. Charles P. Curd, Smith Academy, St. Louis, has forwarded to the Commercial Club a poem of his entitled, "The Ladder in the Graveyard," in which he refers to his old boyhood home in Kentucky. The poem has been widely published in Southern and Western papers. In his letetr Prof. Curd says:

"It may be that because I left Kentucky long ago all my friends and acquaintances have forgotten me or, at least, have forgotten where I am and whether I am dead or alive. I am much interested in the work you are carrying on. I think it will be a great benefit to Kentucky and know that it is being received with great interest among all Kentuckians everywhere. I was born in Louisville on the present site of the section of the city where he was raised, and especially concerning the hardships of the pioneers. I have no doubt that Judge Bland would consent to such an arrangement, though I have not suggested it to him."

George W. Blatterman, of St. Louis, writes:

"I think your plan for our Home-coming is the most heart-touching piece of sentiment that ever happened. I have heard a great deal of it. Everybody says it is so Kentucky-like. God bless my queenly old State and God bless good old Louisville. I am a grandson of Judge Lewis Collins, the old State historian, and have a host of relatives in Louisville and all over the State."

Dr. Kate M. Beall, of St. Louis, wrote:

"I came to St. Louis when I married and have lived here ever since but my heart has always been in old Kentucky." She thinks that if she ever got back she could never be persuaded to leave. She was born at Columbus, in Hickman county and her husband is P. R. Beall, who was formerly of Hopkinsville.

Joseph Glenn Berry, of Ashland, writes:

"I would be glad to come home but my age will not let me. I was born in Bourbon county in 1823 (age eighty-three years); came with my parents to this State in 1829. You see I have been here in Missouri seventy-seven years. I am feeble."

M. R. Gossett, of Kansas City, one of the leading spirits of the Kansas City Home-coming Week Association, has sent long lists of Kentuckians to the Commercial Club.

Miss Martha Henderson, of Fulton, is one of the oldest survivors of the Boone family and is over seventy years of age. Her birthday will be on June 15, the day that "Daniel Boone day" will be celebrated in Cherokee Park. She has some relics in the way of silver spoons that were used by the pioneer. Her mother had the full set but it has been broken. The spoons will be on exhibition. She and her brothers, Thomas and J. F. Henderson are grandchildren of Judge Jesse Boone, next to the youngest son of the first Kentuckian.

Perhaps the most interesting letter received by the Commercial Club was from J. W. Owen, of Laplata, who, if he did as he planned, is now on his way to the Home-coming. He wrote to Mr. Hughes that he was commonly called "Old Kaintuck," and was born and reared in Barren county, near Cave City. He knew Gov. Leslie well, he said. His letter:

"I received your most welcome invitation to your city in June. Hoping that city may be filled on that occasion by hundreds of thousands of strayed sons and daughters of that grand old State, I expect, by the help of our divine Creator, to be one of that number. As I am very unable to buy railroad tickets, even at low rates, I have decided to walk. I am nearly seventy years of age, born in Kentucky, but you know I could have been born anywhere else I had wanted to. That was about Gen. Jackson's time, and he was such a good old Democrat.

"I expect to come and am making my plans to start about April 15 in somewhat of a novel way of travel. I will come pushing a cart or wheelbarrow, camping out at night with my favorite dog, which I have named Rover Boone, in honor of Daniel Boone. Seeing that you will have a grand parade of floats on the streets one night, I would feel much honored to ride on one of them with my wheel and good old companion.

"Well, I guess you want to know about how many from here will likely come. There are many Kentuckians in this country, and so far as I have been told many of them would come on low railroad rates. All I hear speak of it are very much elated. I will close by hoping to be there."

Another of the Kentucky Mayors is W. G. Pendleton, of Boonville, Mo. He has accepted an invitation to the Home-coming and will try to be here. Mr. Pendleton was an Oldham county boy.

William A. Nelson, a banker and broker of Kansas City, president of several banks and trust companies in Missouri, will be in attendance. He is the man who sent $25 to the Galt House, asking that a front room be reserved for him.

MONTANA.

MONTANA Kentuckians have mostly been away from home for a good many years, but they are still strong in their love for the mother State. Charles L. Parks, formerly of Richmond, Ky., now of Kendall, Mont., writes to the Commercial Club this way:

"It gives me much pleasure to read in the columns of the papers of the Home-coming of all Kentuckians. I have been away for twenty years, and I must say I feel proud and appreciate the glorious opportunity they are offering me to come home and visit a place that is nearer and dearer to me than any other place on earth. Twenty years ago I came to seek my fortune in the West. While I have not been as prosperous as some of my countrymen, it is a gratification and fills my heart with pleasure to know that a great many of the old Kentucklans have prospered. All hail to Kentucky. Put my name down on the list of Home-comers and send me a programme."

Preston H. Leslie, of Helena, Mont., is a Kentuckian who has risen in the world. He was born in what is now Clinton county March 2, 1819, and is now one of Kentucky's oldest sons. He was educated in the neighborhood public schools until 1837, after which he was at the academy at Columbia for a short term. He was admitted to the bar in 1840, was in the State Senate for eight years, one term as Speaker of the Senate. He was Governor of Kentucky from 1871 to 1875. Circuit Judge for five years in the next decade and Governor of the Territory of Montana from 1887 to 1889, after which he established a law practice at Helena. From 1894 to 1898 he was United States Attorney for the district of Montana. Efforts are being made to get him to attend the Home-coming, but it is feared that his advanced age will be a bar. Gov. Leslie has been an acive member of the Baptist church since 1828.

R. A. Bell, president of the East Pacific Mining Company, of Helena, has writen that he hopes to be in attendance at the Home-coming.

"An absence of thirty-nine years has not in the least weakened the love I have for the land of my birth," writes E. A. Huffman, of Whelan. "For the advantage of everything that is good and true, the grand old State has not a more earnest wisher than myself. I send my hearty wish that all the children of the good old Commonwealth may have a joyous meeting."

W. S. Rutherford, of Nebo, Ky., has written:

"I herewith inclose you the name of my son, who has been away from Kentucky for seventeen years, Willie P. Rutherford, Saco, Valley county, Mont. In writing to him to come tell him that his mother would meet him in Louisville if he should come."

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

NEW HAMPSHIRE Kentuckians didn't have much to say about this Home-coming, and about the only thing in the way of a letter in the files of the Commercial Club is from William E. Maroni, Mayor of Portsmouth. New Hampshire is the home of the Home-comings, and the Mayor had a good deal to say about the way such celebrations are handled by them. He made several pertinent suggestions and registered his best wishes for the success of the Home-coming.

With fifty-eight Kentuckians, native born, New Hampshire probably has fewer than any other State in the Union.

NEBRASKA.

THERE are a good many genuine Kentuckians in Nebraska, and some of them have written the breeziest kind of letters to the Commercial Club. Although some of them have been away long enough to be formidable candidates for the "longest-away" prize, they have not forgotten their early homes in Kentucky.

"Oh! I would just like to be able to come back there and fix myself right to spend the balance of my days there," writes Joseph Settler, of Nebraska City. He was born in Louisville January 24, 1833, and left the State sixty years ago. The last time he was back was in 1859.

Harry C. Blain, of Jerome, a grand nephew of Daniel Boone, has accepted an invitation for Home-coming Week.

A. W. Atwood, of Plattsmouth, writes:

"I note in the press reports that you are to have 'gret' doings in your beautiful city, a kind of Home-coming that touches a tender spot in the hearts of many. We will all want to visit other cities of our native State, where we lived during the days of our boyhood."

John J. Ryder, of the Omaha Bee, writes:

"Although an exile from Kentucky, my birth State, for many years in Minnesota and Nebraska, I have a feeling of pride in the State and in some degree for 'Sweet Owen,' in whose borders I was born."

Mr. Ryder is a namesake of ex-Gov. John J. Crittenden, who was in office at the time Mr. Ryder was born.

P. H. Gufton, of Oxford, a former Sheriff of Ballard county, has been away from Kentucky for fifteen years and writes to the Commercial Club that he hopes to attend the Home-coming.

Ezra E. Howard, cashier of the State Bank of Edgar, was born in Kentucky and left the State in 1867. He has written that he will be a Home-comer.

Dr. J. W. McCann, of South Omaha, has written that he and his wife and their children wish to attend the Home-coming. He was in the Louisville Health Department, he wrote, "when Charles P. Weaver was clerk in a dry goods store." He was married in 1884 to a Kentucky girl. The pictures of Mr. and Mrs. McCann have been printed.

E. L. Sandusky, of Falls City, was born in Jessamine county and moved West in 1883. Mrs. Sandusky was a Miss Kate E. Hughes, who was born in Woodford county. She was related to Judge Edward Hughes, once of Louisville.

NEW JERSEY.

NEW JERSEY didn't draw many more Kentuckians than the other Atlantic coast States, although it appears to have a few who are still fond of their old home in the Bluegrass. The nearest like a real letter of all the missives received from that State was from J. K. Hickman, general freight agent of the Trenton, Lawrenceville and Princeton railroad, of Trenton. He writes that he has not been in Kentucky since he left Louisville thirty-four years ago, but that he hopes to be here for the Home-coming. He sent the names of J. M. Priest, Harden Craig and R. M. McElroy, professors in Princeton University, natives of Kentucky.

"I heartily approve of the idea of the Home-coming of the sons and daughters of old Kentucky," writes F. H. Smith, president of a large manufacturing company at Camden. "I have always had a warm spot in my heart for my native State and will be glad to embrace this opportunity of visiting Kentucky once more."

NEW MEXICO.

WHATEVER the number of Kentucklans in New Mexico may be few of them have written to the Commercial Club to ask about invitations or to accept them. The only thing in the way of a letter is one from Henry L. Pittman, of Albuquerque, who writes:

"I notice you state in your invitation that you expect to secure a railroad rate of one fare for the round trip for Home-coming Week; may I inquire if you will also be able to secure a low rate for one way? I think that perhaps I shall want to remain in Kentucky instead of returning here and many others may want to do likewise."

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, with its metropolis of America, which has many sons and daughters of every State, will be largely represented at the Home-coming. One of the greatest of her adopted sons and one who will be most gladly welcomed is William Lindsay, formerly United States Senator from Kentucky. He was born in Rockbridge county, Va., September 4, 1835, but came to Kentucky in 1854, settling at Clinton, in Hickman county, and until the last few years was a resident of Kentucky. He is now practicing law in New York and is a member of the law firm of Lindsay, Kremer, Kalish & Palmer. He has accepted an invitation to be present at the Home-coming and will be asked to participate in the exercises.

He served in the Confederate army, rising to the rank of Captain, and after the war resumed the practice of law, which he began in 1858. He has been State Senator twice and was appointed to the United States Senate to fill the unexpired term of John G. Carlisle and was afterward elected for a full term, which expired in 1901. He has been a Judge of the Kentucky Court of Appeals and member of the commission of the World's Columbian Exposition. He refused an appointment to the Interstate Railroad Commission.

Another son of Kentucky that is an honor to her is John G. Carlisle, who was born in Campbell county, Ky., one day after Senator Lindsay saw the light in Virginia. He was educated in the common schools and was admitted to the bar in the same year with Senator Lindsay. He has served several terms in the Kentucky Legislature; was delegate at large to the national Democratic convention in 1868; Lieutenant Governor of Kentucky from 1871 to 1875; member of Congress from 1877 to 1889, serving as Speaker of the House from 1883 to 1889; noted as a low tariff advocate; United States Senator from Kentucky from 1890 to 1893; Secretary of the Treasury of the United States from 1893 to 1897, since which time he has practiced law in New York. In 1896 he was affiliated with the single-standard Democrats. He is expected to attend the Home-coming.

William J. Hendrick, of New York, enters the name of his little granddaughter, Elizabeth Wilson, daughter of Robert Burns Wilson, for the prize for the former Kentuckian who left the State at the earliest age. Mr. Hendrick was Attorney General of Kentucky from 1891 to 1894, and was a resident of Flemingsburg. His home at Frankfort was one of the finest residences in the State. By reputation, Mr. Hendrick was one of the finest orators and the handsomest man that ever went out from Kentucky.

"Kindly put my name and that of Mrs. Snowden down on your books as visitors during Home-coming Week. From every Kentuckian I have seen in the past two months, the first question is, 'are you going back in June?' and every answer is the same, 'we would not miss it.'"

* * *

Reached the Right Spot.

Aaron B. Levi, of Syracuse, writes:

"Believe me, nothing could have reached that tender spot which a residence in your State is bound to kindle, as did your invitation for Home-coming Week. Although a native and a resident of the Empire State, seventeen years of my life were spent in old Kentucky—years of unalloyed happiness. Twenty-three years have elapsed since my departure from Louisville. My ambition and fondest hope is once again to tread the soil of the dark and bloody ground and to mingle with the best people on earth. What memories that little pamphlet nurtured to life again—memories sweet and lasting."

Joseph A. Altsheler, who has made an enviable reputation in New York City, both as a novelist and as a newspaper man, has accepted the invitation for Home-coming Week. Mr. Altsheler is taking great interest in coming to the reunion and has looked up a large number of ex-Kentuckians living in the metropolis and at his request they have been sent invitations.

Mrs. Drake, of Richmond Hill, Long Island, left Louisville in 1877. She was born in Carrollton, July 18, 1847. Her father was Quinn Morton Owen and her grandfather, David Owen, was Sheriff of Carroll county for fifty years in the early days of the State. She had brothers in the Confederate army and has sons in the Philippines. She writes:

"I do so earnestly desire to come home again, that I take the opportunity of writing for an invitation. If I have my health and strength and God is willing I will be there. May God bless and prosper this, your undertaking, and bless all of our native statesmen."

Marc Klaw, senior member of the theatrical syndicate of Klaw & Erlanger, was for many years a resident of Louisville and was born at Paducah, May 28, 1858. He will be in Europe at the time and has sent his regrets. He wrote:

"I regret exceedingly that I cannot be among the great gathering of good fellows who will doubtless make that week a notable one in the history of Louisville."

Invitations to Home-coming Week have been mailed to every member of "The Kentuckians," of New York City, the register of that society having been furnished the Commercial Club by John C. Breckinridge, the secretary.

Mrs. D. C. Payne, of New York City, writes:

"If all the wanderers could respond to your hospitable invitation, I fear your hospitality would be taxed to its limit, if there is such a thing as a limit to Kentucky hospitality. I am a native of Bath county and wish you the happiness of a glorious success."

NORTH AND SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE two Carolinas have some warm-hearted Kentuckians within their borders, but no letters like those received from other States have been received from them; just a few names and requests for invitations in formal language. One letter was received from South Carolina and a few more from North Carolina. Invitations were asked for by Col. S. A. Jones, and by James McBowles, of Waynesville.

NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA.

THE Dakotas have a good many Kentuckians, although few of them have written to the Commercial Club. The letters received, however, were appreciative and full of enthusiasm.

Mrs. Maggie L. Robinson, of Hannaford, N. D., has accepted the invitation to Home-coming. She wrote that her father was Captain of the Thirty-fourth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and that she left Louisville ten years ago. Her letter closes: "Three cheers for old Kentucky."

I. A. Smith, of Ft. Pierre, S. D., a brother of the late S. T. Smith, of Louisville, has accepted the Home-coming invitation.

O. J. Baughn, a prominent real estate man of Gregory, S. D., writes to the Commercial Club, as follows:

"Your invitation, gotten up in a most cordial and attractive style, received, and I hasten to accept. I think the idea is a splendid one and I am sure all absent Kentuckians agree with me. I was formerly a Lexington man, and hailed with delight this opportunity to meet old friends and renew cherished friendships about the old fireside. May every success attend your efforts."

OHIO.

JUST over the river, like Illinois and Indiana, Ohio has a great many Kentuckians, all of whom are good representatives of the State of which they are natives. About the most widely known of all the sons of Kentucky in that State is Tom Loftin Johnson, who became famous as Mayor of Cleveland. He was born at Georgetown, Ky., July 18, 1854, and went to Indiana in his boyhood, where he was educated. He was a clerk in the offices of the Louisville Street Railway Company from 1869 to 1875, and invented several street railway appliances that made him rich. He bought a street railway in Indianapolis, and later acquired large street railway interests in Cleveland, Detroit and Brooklyn. He is also an iron manufacturer in Cleveland. He was a member of Congress from 1891 to 1895, and has been a prominent exponent of the single-tax theories of Henry George. He has retired from business, and is devoting his time to taxation questions and to official duties. He has been several times Mayor of Cleveland, and is said to have given that city the best administration of any city in America.

* * *

Col. Johnson's Acceptance.

Col. E. Polk Johnson, in accepting an invitation to the Home-coming, writes to the Commercial Club:

"I am a Kentuckian by right of birth in Jefferson county sixty-one years ago to-day. I left the State January 1, 1904, and as an official of the Treasury Department have been stationed in Chicago, St. Louis, London, El Paso, Tex.; New Orleans, Seattle, and am now in Cincinnati. Have I been absent long enough and sufficiently distributed over the earth's surface to make me a 'Home-comer?'"

Rudolph Burkhart, who is now living in the State Soldiers' Home, Sandusky, writes:

"I was once a resident of Kentucky and served in a Kentucky regiment in the Civil War. I have a sister buried there. I love Kentucky and her citizens and anything pertaining to the grand old Commonwealth and her generous people revives the warmest feelings and the brightest thoughts in my heart."

William G. Coldeway, who was elected secretary of the Commercial Club at its organization in 1887 and who was also chairman of the Armory Committee of the Board of Trade, has accepted an invitation for himself and his two sons for Home-coming Week. Mr. Coldeway now lives in Cincinnati.

Mrs. H. M. Allen, of Cincinnati, writes:

"I have been out of the State for twenty years, yet there is no place so dear to me. I hope to be there and meet many of the friends and visit the scenes of my youth during Home-coming Week." Mrs. Allen is a member of the Board of the Johnson's Island Confederate Cemetery Commission, of Cincinnati. Gen. Basil W. Duke, of Louisville, is chairman of the Advisory Board.

* * *

Has Given Assistance.

Brent Arnold, of Cincinnati, Division Freight Agent of the L. and N. railroad, is president of the Kentucky Society he organized in Cincinnati. He has been of great assistance to the Commercial Club.

C. T. Collings, formerly of Louisville, Maj. Buckner A. Wallingford, Jr., formerly of Mayfield, and Col. John S. Shuff, formerly of Harrison county, now all of Cincinnati, have been sent invitations to Home-coming Week and are expected to attend.

G. D. Ragan, of Springfield, O., wrote to the Commercial Club saying that he was fortunate enough to be born in Elizabethtown and that he hoped to be able to attend the Home-coming.

OKLAHOMA.

MANY of the letters from the hosts of Kentuckians in Oklahoma contain objections as to the time of the Home-coming as did those from Oklahoma's sister territory. Farmers say that they can't get away in the busiest time of the year and ask if the time could not be set forward or back. The Oklahoma Kentuckians are appreciative and many of them are planning to attend the Home-coming.

Miss Pearl D. Weatherford, of Shawnee, wrote asking for the personal address of Robert E. Hughes, director-general of the Home-coming, saying that she wanted to call on him and tell him "what a good man" he is to do so much for ex-Kentuckians. She and her sister, Miss Cecyle B. Weatherford are daughters of Dr. S. H. Weatherford, a graduate of the Louisville Medical College and they were born in Louisville. The whole family expects to attend the reunion.

* * *

Many From Oklahoma.

W. G. Morman, cashier of the Bank of Nashville, Okla., writes enthusiastically of Home-coming Week and predicts that a large delegation of ex-Kentuckians will come to the reunion from this section of the Territory.

Richard Selby, of Apache, is organizing the former Kentuckians of that vicinity with a view to have them come to Louisville to Home-coming Week in a body. Mr. Selby has written:

"I have been requested by the former Kentuckians here to get up a club from this place. This I will gladly do as all seem to be taking a great deal of interest in the reunion and I think we will get up a very strong club."

Mrs. Mary Ball-Orr Herbert, of Pawnee, a great-granddaughter of the noted Kentucky pioneer, Alexander D. Orr, has written that she expects to be in Louisville Home-coming Week. Alexander Orr was a compatriot of Daniel Boone and did much toward the development and the settlement of Kentucky. He married the first cousin of George Washington.

J. H. Anderson, of Leal, formerly of Montgomery county, Ky., left the State in 1876 and has never been back. He will try to arrange to attend the Home-coming.

M. F. Elkin, eighty-two years of age, of Supply, has written that he hopes to be in attendance, as has W. H. Brooks, of Oklahoma City, who has sent long lists of names of Kentuckians.

* * *

Wants To Be Register.

C. O. Harned, cashier of the bank at Helena, has writen that he wants to be register of the Breckenridge county home-comers, as he will have an opportunity that way to meet more old friends than he otherwise would. George W. Barton, of Avoca, was born in Graves county, Ky., eighty-two years ago. He is a veteran of the Mexican and Civil Wars and has been a great traveler. He hopes to be able to attend the reunion.

Dr. D. H. Patton, of Woodward, was born in Fleming county in 1837. He moved to Indiana at the age of fifteen years and served in the Thirty-eighth Indiana infantry in the Civil War. He is a graduate of Northwestern University and in 1890 represented his Indiana district in Congress. He has been receiver for the United States land office at Woodward and has written that he will come if he can do so.

OREGON.

THE roving spirit possessed by Daniel Boone has possessed many of the Kentuckians who have made their way to Oregon, where they are now settled. Many of them have been away so long that they are determined to make one last effort to see their old homes before it is too late.

Mrs. Mollie Gaines Clore, writing from Waveland, says:

"I intend to be present with the ex-Kentuckians in June, Home-coming Week. I have been absent from the State twenty-five years, but am still a loyal friend to the Bluegrass State, the land I love the best."

Lewis Garrigus, of Portland, writes:

"I am sending you an additional list of Kentuckians. We are talking of getting a special car and taking a party for the trip."

Another Kentuckian who has not seen his native State for years, and who will be in Louisville during Home-coming Week is William Bybee, of Jacksonville. Mr. Bybee is seventy-six years of age, but feels young enough to make the long trip over the continent for Home-coming Week. He left Kentucky in 1852 making the trip to California overland.

"I think your Home-coming Week an excellent idea and I hope to be among the pilgrims. Anything I can do to help you will be a labor of love."

From Vale, J. D. King writes that he intends to come to Kentucky for the first time in twenty years, and will spend Home-coming Week in Louisville. "All my people live in Owen county, and I want to see the old places once more," he writes.

PENNSYLVANIA.

ACCORDING to the looks of the Pennsylvania file at the offices of the Commercial Club there are no Kentuckians in that State. It is chiefly remarkable, from the standpoint of a Home-comer, from the fact that it is the place of residence of a niece and nephew of Stephen Collins Foster. They will probably be present at the festival, especially on Foster Day. R. T. McCready, of Pittsburg, has written suggesting that they be invited to the Home-coming. The children, Miss Evelyn Foster, a young girl of sixteen years, and a boy, William Foster, who is several years younger, have been urged to come. Miss Foster is said to have no little literary talent and William is said to sing his uncle's songs with great success. They are the children of Morrison Foster, the last surviving brother.

RHODE ISLAND.

LIKE the other States of New England, Rhode Island is very short in the number of Kentuckians it harbors, the total number, as shown by the last census, being 147. The files in the offices of the Commercial Club have little to show in the way of letters from the wandering sons.

TENNESSEE.

IT doesn't appear that very many of the sons and daughters of Kentucky have settled in Tennessee, or, if they have, only a few of them have had much to write about to the Commercial Club. They show the right spirit, however.

"I have been living in Tennessee for nine years," writes W. W. Williams, of Concord, "but I still love old Kentucky and all of her people. Mrs. Williams and myself will attend the reunion if possible."

W. J. Turpin, of Memphis, writes: "I have read with a great deal of interest of the grand and glorious affair that the good people of Louisville are arranging to give in the nature of a Home-coming during the month of June, and I, being a Kentuckian, want to assist in swelling the attendance. I take great pleasure in giving you the names of some of my old friends and acquaintances who are now 'battling life's fearful odds' in other than their native soil. I trust that conditions may be such that I will have the honor to be numbered among you, and will certainly put forth every effort to do so."

George M. Bedford, of Memphis, writes: "I was born and reared in Paris, Ky., and want to attend Home-coming next June. I hope to live in the old State again some day."

TEXAS.

KENTUCKY has sent some of her most loyal and her most noted men to Texas, and of all of the States of the great Southwest, Texas probably has as many as, if not more, Kentuckians than any other. Among the men whose coming is most earnestly urged by the Commercial Club is Gen. Adam Rankin Johnson, of Burnett, Texas.

Gen. Johnson was born at Henderson, Ky., February 8, 1834, and was a son of Dr. Thomas J. Johnson. He was educated at Henderson and was married January 1, 1861, to Miss Josephine Eastland, at Burnett, Tex. He moved to Texas from Kentucky in 1854, Burnett then being the extreme frontier, and while surveying he had several conflicts with Indians. He entered the service of the Confederacy in the spring of 1861 at Hopkinsville, Ky., in Gen. Forrest's command. He raised, mounted and equipped 2,200 men in Union, Henderson and other counties of Kentucky. He commanded one of Morgan's brigades in the Ohio raid and reorganized and commanded Morgan's men while the latter was a prisoner of war and was at the head of them at the battle of Chickamauga. He was ordered back to the pay department of Kentucky in July, 1864, and on August 21 of the same year he had both of his eyes shot out of his head in an engagement. He was sent to prison at Fort Warren, Boston Harbor, in November of the same year and returned to Texas at the close of the war.

In Texas he resumed his business as land agent and laid off the town of Marble Falls in 1887. Gen. Johnson has attended many of the reunions of the Confederate veterans and is personally known to hundreds of people in Louisville and Kentucky.

* * *

A Winner of Prominence.

Roger Quarles Mills, of Corsicana, Tex., is another son of Kentucky who went to Texas in his youth and who has won great prominence in the Lone Star State. He was born in Todd county, Ky., March 30, 1832, and moved to Texas in 1849. He studied law in the office of his brother-in-law, the Hon. Reuben A. Reeves, at Palestine, Tex., and the disability of minority being removed by the Legislature of that State, he was admitted to the bar at twenty years of age. He began the practice of law at Corsicana in 1852. He was married in 1858 to Miss Carolina Jones. He was elected to the Texas House of Representatives in 1859; was at the battle of Wilson's Creek; later colonel of the Tenth Texas infantry, serving with distinction throughout the war. He was three times wounded. He was member of Congress from his district in Texas from 1873 to 1892; was appointed to the United States Senate the last year to fill out an unexpired term and was elected to a full term in 1893. Nothing is being left undone to secure his attendance at the Home-coming.

Mrs. B. C. Riddle, Pilot Point, writes: "I was born and reared in Meade county, Kentucky. I left there June 2, 1859, and have never returned. I hope to be there at the reunion. I will be seventy-three years of age on June 25.

C. H. Powell, a prominent real estate man of Austin, who has not been in Louisville for thirty-five years, has written that he intends to come for Home-coming Week. He is a Confederate veteran and left the city soon after the close of the war. Not even the attractions of two Confederate reunions were sufficient to bring him back, but he writes that he cannot resist the temptation to come back and see the "folks at home." Mr. Powell is the son of the late Dr. L. Powell, who practiced medicine in this city for many years.

Five Times a Mayor.

J. T. Leonard, who is now serving his fifth term as Mayor of Gainesville, is a native of Bullitt county, Kentucky. His boyhood was spent in Hardin county until twenty-five years ago, when Mr. Leonard removed to Texas, where he has taken a prominent part in the affairs of that State. Gainesville is a town of 12,000 inhabitants and under the able leadership of Mr. Leonard has progressed rapidly. He writes that nothing will prevent him from coming to Louisville during Home-coming Week.

C. L. Hobdy, of Amarillo, writes:

"Your invitation to be present during Home-coming Week received this morning and I hasten to accept."

"We'll be there—every mother's son of us who can raise the wind—and we will have a round up the like of which has never been seen in the old Commonwealth. God bless Kentucky, we are always glad to come back to her.

"The idea of Home-coming Week was nothing less than an inspiration—and may the sight of the wanderers bring joy not only to our individual loved ones, but also make glad the heart of her who conceived the idea that is to culminate in the grandest and greatest event in the history of Kentucky, the gathering together once more of her sons and daughters, a reunion of the great and glorious Kentucky family.

"Round us up in your city, famed for its hospitality; in Louisville, the gateway to the North and South, the happy medium between East and West; then let us roam for a while in the Bluegrass pastures or in the fields of the 'Pennerile,' as each one's instinct may direct. Then we will return, if we succeed again in breaking the ties that bind us to Kentucky, to our respective homes, with praise on our lips for our native land and pride in our hearts for the place of our birth.

"Thanking you for the invitation, wishing the movement all the success it so richly deserves and all Kentuckians a happy Home-coming, I remain, yours very truly."

Wanted Larger Cards.

R. A. St. John, a former Kentuckian, who is now Mayor of Cisco, Tex., has written:

"Enclosed I return your card as per your request, but suggest that you send larger cards to Texas for there are lots of ex-Kentuckians here and we are all coming and intend spending a week in grand old Louisville. Then we mountain boys will hie once more to our old mountain homes to drink once more from nature's own bubbling cup. Any assistance I can render you here or there will be gladly given and at my own expense. Command me."

Lon D. Mars, of Amarillo, has written that he is coming for Home-coming Week:

"I will be accompanied by my wife, I hope. I am not married yet, but save rooms for two."

John Breckinridge Martin, a namesake of Gen. Breckinridge, writes to the Commercial Club:

"I am, with 40,000 others in Texas, a prodigal from the grand old Commonwealth of Kentucky. I have the honor of being a namesake of Gen. John C. Breckinridge. I want to leave a Texas wreath at the base of his monument."

W. C. Barnett, a cousin of Col. C. M. Barnett, formerly Surveyor of the Port of Louisville, writes from Valley Mills:

"I shall try to avail myself of the opportunity to visit the State of my boyhood days, although I left there in 1851."

John Andrewartha, who is well remembered by many of the older citizens of Louisville, and who is now general manager and chief engineer of the Industrial Contract Company of Austin, Texas, will be one of the visitors in Louisville during Home-coming Week. In his letter to the Commercial Club Mr. Andrewartha says: "The city of Louisville bears my name on the City Hall, A. D. 1871, and the Courier-Journal building, at the corner of Fourth and Green, the design for which I made in 1875, in which building my son, John O. Andrewartha, was born in 1876, probably the only child born in that building. The history of the building up of the city of Louisville after the war, the building of thirty or forty Main-street houses, the building of the Galt House, the Bridgeford's residence, the Hamilton Bros., Standifords, Baxters, Averys, Ellis', and many more of your residences had the pace set by me, and with William Henry Whitestone, the Newcomb, the Ford, the Ballard and altogether many Broadway and Fourth avenue residences are work from my hands or my original designs. Your Jockey Clubhouse and track entrances may also be mine. There are several Kentuckians in Austin, and I and my family will interest ourselves in bringing them together and in "rounding up" this great State of Texas for the Home-coming."

Kentuckytown, Tex.

Because of the many Kentuckians who settled there, a little town in Texas was named Kentuckytown, and from it a good sized delegation of former Kentuckians are expected during Homecoming Week. Quincy Vittitoe, who has not been in Kentucky for over half a century, has written to the Commercial Club as follows: "My father moved from old Kentucky in 1849, when I was four years old. Our county was Nelson, fifteen miles from Bardstown, near New Haven. I would like very much to come back and see my native county, as I have never been there since we left fifty-seven years ago next September. My father built a boat on Rolling Fork river, where we lived, and we came in that boat until we reached the mouth of the Red river, thence to Shreveport, La., and there he bought teams and we moved out near Marshall, Texas. There we remained two years, and then came to where Kentuckytown now is."

The third list of former Kentuckians living in Smithville has been received by the Commercial Club from George G. Berry, of that city. Mr. Berry is much interested in Home-coming Week and has looked up all the Kentuckians in Barthrop county, of which Smithville is the county seat. He writes that the Home-coming appeals strongly to the ex-Kentuckians there, and that many of them will come to the reunion.

Prof. A. C. Delaney, of the University of Texas, at Austin, has forwarded a list of twenty Kentuckians living in Texas. He has lived in Texas for four years, and has written that he looks forward eagerly to Home-coming Week.

Mrs. Jessie Edmonston, of San Marco, writes:

"Louisville is the place where 'I first saw the light,' and my happiest days were spent in sound of the roar of the falls of the Ohio."

* * *

"The Grandest State."

In sending in a list of nearly thirty names of former Kentuckians living in Dallas, G. M. Spears writes:

"If it is impossible to be present during that occasion we, one and all, would appreciate an invitation to keep and treasure as a token that we are not forgotten by the grandest State in the grandest Union in the world, which we hold so dear, so dear."

Miss Katie Weber, of San Antonio, in asking for an invitation to the Home-coming, writes:

"Being a product of Kentucky, I have a warm spot in my heart for the dear old Commonwealth."

In asking that an invitation be sent to her uncle, Jacob Kennedy Goodknight, of Elmview, Tex., Miss Bertha Hammond, of Shelbyville, Ky., says that he is the great-nephew of the first white child born in Kentucky. The invitation was forwarded to Mr. Goodknight, with a personal letter from Mr. Hughes.

UTAH.

UTAH Kentuckians are such a scarce article and it will be so difficult for them to get to Louisville for Home-coming week that there is a premium on them, almost. Only a few letters have been received from that far Western State, but the writers speak of their great desire to accept an invitation.

Henry M. Bond, of Ogden, asks that friends in Kentucky be urged by the Commercial Club to extend invitations of their own to relatives in the West, as it is going to be so difficult for them to get here anyway. His stepfather, Henry R. French, in the forties and fifties, published the Bardstown Herald, the Georgetown Herald and the Ashland Kentuckian. He himself was the publisher of the Big Sandy Herald. In Utah he is a grocer and a printer combined.

L. S. Abbott, of Vernal, is the only man besides Mr. Bond who has written. Mr. Abbott has asked for an invitation.

VERMONT.

VERMONT Kentuckians are as scarce as good farms in that State. The last census shows that there are only sixty-four of them. Letters to the Mayors of Vermont cities and to other public men haven't done much good in the way of getting names of former residents and natives of this State.

VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA, although the mother of Kentucky, has but few of her grandchildren staying with her. To find them one must go west or southwest. There are some in Richmond, of course, and scattered out in the State are others. George C. Howell, of Richmond, writes:

"The undersigned, together with all the other Kentucky residents of Richmond, is very much interested in the Kentucky Home-coming Week, and I think I can safely promise you that we will be on hand almost to a man. We have now on foot a movement to form a Kentucky Club, the organization to be of a permanent nature, so as to be better able to console each other for our expatriation."

Ivan H. Wise, Jr., of Old Point Comfort, writes that the Virginians are so much interested in Home-coming Week for Kentucky that it is planned to arrange for a Home-coming of all Virginians for one of the weeks during the Jamestown Exposition in 1907. Mr. Wise is a son of the Rev. Ivan J. Wise, a Baptist preacher, formerly of Louisville, now of Owensboro. He was born in Louisville.

WASHINGTON.

NOT very many of the Washington Kentuckians wrote to the Commercial Club although Washington like all the progressive far-Western States, has its share of them. Some of them have been away for long years but all of them have made good representatives of the kind of men Kentucky breeds. Witness what Joel Shoemaker, editor of the Twice-a-week Intelligence, of Seattle, has written to the Commercial Club:

"I am glad to say that I represent one of the 3,896 native born Kentuckians now residing in the State of Washington, according to the last census published. We are generally a happy, peaceable lot of citizens and command the respect of every Westerner. Our vocations include all the respectable classes of business and, as a rule, we stand high in the estimation of our associates. But many of us have not visited the old home for several years. To have a general family reunion will be the realization of many dreams. I cannot speak for every Kentuckian in Washington but can say for myself that I am in hearty accord with the plan to have a reunion and wish you all the success possible. My native place is Butler, Pendleton county. I was educated at Lexington and have numerous relatives in different parts of the State. The proposed Home-coming strikes me as being a novel idea which should be carried out as far as possible."

Miss Harriet Helen Smith, of Seattle, writes:

"I would like to be among the Home-coming guests at Louisville next June. We came West when I was four years old. That was thirty years ago. I have never been in Kentucky since. My sisters were born in Louisville as well as myself."

WEST VIRGINIA.

IN West Virginia is repeated the story of Virginia. Only one or two of the Kentuckians in that State have been heard from, and they don't have very much to say. Frederick Moore, editor of the Central Republican, of Bellington, has written more than all the Kentuckians together. He wrote that he would be glad to do all in his power to make the Home-coming a success and he is not a Kentuckian. He writes:

"The world is fast learning that Kentucky means more than a land of murderers and drunkards. I feel that some of the little disorders that have occurred in your State in the mountain regions, have been very much magnified and have done the fair name of your State an injury. We have with us here in fact one of the leading men of our town, G. C. Broomall, a native of your State. Mr. Broomall is president of our Board of Trade and also president and one of the moving figures in the Bellington Iron and Steel Company."

D. P. Kenny, of Morgantown, is a descendant of Daniel Boone. Mr. Kenny will probably be in attendance during Home-coming Week.

WISCONSIN.

WISCONSIN, like its twin sister, Michigan, didn't get many Kentuckians in the shuffle, although some of those inside its boundaries have been away from their native State long enough to be strongly tipped for winning the 'longest-away" prize offered by the Commercial Club. There are several Kentuckians in that State descended from Daniel Boone.

Mrs. Bertha Mannion, of Neenah, writes:

"I would be delighted be among the fortunate ones to attend Home-coming Week. I am a (dear old Louisville, Ky., born) native of the State. Although I have made my home in the North for several years, I wish to rest beneath Kentucky soil when my work is done."

Mrs. Mannion adds that the Home-coming has been widely advertised in the Northwest and that many of her friends and neighbors, who are Kentuckians, are preparing to attend the reunion.

Among those who have secured reservations at the hotels of Louisville is Thomas Bardon, of Ashland, Wis., who writes that he has already engaged rooms at the Louisville Hotel "for the entire five days' fun." Mr. Bardon is president of the Ashland National bank.

* * *

Kin To Daniel Boone.

Mrs. C. A. Bryan, of Neenah, claims kinship to Daniel Boone. She writes that her mother was a great-granddaughter of Jacob Boone, a cousin of Daniel Boone, and that her grandfather was Strother Boone Nicholson, of Maysville. She was born at Maysville and lived there for twenty-nine years. She adds that she has a tender feeling in her heart for Kentucky.

Jesse H. Robertson, of Monroe, was born in Bath county, December 6, 1819, and left in the fall of 1835, since when he has not returned. He sends the names of his brother Charles Robertson, of Edna, Kas., and his sister, Mrs. Mary Gray, of Austin, Ill., who left the State when two months of age. He is anxious that they all return so that the family may be reunited.

W. Knowenstrol, of Milwaukee, formerly of Louisville, Mrs. E. E. Dillon, of Madison, formerly of Clark county, and a daughter of the late William R. Duncan, and William P. Brenner, of Green Bay, born at Fry's Hill, ten miles from Louisville, have written the Commercial Club asking for invitations and expressing their intention to attend the Home-coming is possible.

WYOMING.

THE best and about the only letter that came to the Commercial Club out of Wyoming was from J. E. Bryant, editor of the Big Horn County Rustler, of Basin. He writes with the freshness of the mountain air, and tells the story of his Western State pretty fully. He says:

"I have read with pleasure and much interest the plan you have formulated for Home-coming Week to the sons and daughters of the old Commonwealth. I am one of those sons, and love every foot of my native State. The plan is excellent and the sentiment beautiful. There are many Kentuckians throughout the Big Horn basin who would be pleased to receive an invitation. I wish to say this to the credit of all Kentuckians: I have been rustling around the West for some time, and not a Kentuckian have I seen begging for bread. The Rustler goes to almost every home in the Big Horn basin, and if I can do anything to help your plans through its columns, command me."

Although a big State like Wyoming does not send many letters, a few like that received from Mr. Bryant will make up for all that do not come. His columns were used as he offered them, and many names of wandering Kentuckians were obtained by the Commercial Club in that way.

STEPHEN C. FOSTER.

Far, on the Swanee river's shore,
Echoes will whisper evermore;
Echoes of one sweet, wondrous strain,
Heard in the tent, on stormy main;
Heard where the weary sadly roam,
Thinking of those who wait at home.

Loved ones and home his only themes,
Home and his loved, his only dreams;
Singing of love in loneliness,
Singing of home in dire distress;
Giving the world from his own free heart,
Giving the gift of the minstrel's art.

Carve on the tablet Foster's name,
Rear up the shaft that marks his fame;
Hearthstones and hearts, his emblems be,
Pass them to all posterity—
Then, as the world his songs repeat,
Him will they know who sang so sweet.

GEORGE M. VICKERS.

STEPHEN COLLINS FOSTER.

Such men as Foster never die;
They shine like stars in arctic sky;
Their laugh and song sound through the years,
Dispelling sorrow, pain and tears.

"Old Uncle Ned" and "Swanee Riber,"
Will linger down the years forever,
And mellow every heart and soul
That's kind and true from pole to pole.

"Kentucky Home" and "Old Folks," too,
And, "Massa's in de Cold, Cold Ground"
Will bring us tears with love profound.

The Poet's pen and mystic tune
Inspire us in the midnight noon;
For he who writes the songs we sing
Is greater far than crown or king.

He cares not for the sordid cause,
Nor who invents or makes the laws;
He only cares to crush all wrongs,
And for his nation writes her songs.

When pomp and power shall pass away
The Poet soars in deathless lay;
And even when Earth is old and gray
His songs shall triumph o'er his clay.

A NOVEL AGRICULTURAL SIGHT.

unconscionably bold. Many of the older women of the State tell tales that make our highly educated, conventionalized girls of to-day open their eyes. A lover was tried by many tests before he won his fair ladye, who was never to be won for the asking. Each community had its celebrated beauty and belle. Down at Paroquet Springs may be seen to-day a romantic spot known as "The Lone Grave." Here lies buried Lucy Mary Pocahontas Bibb, for whom a duel was fought and whose heart was broken by her choice of the old suitor of wealth instead of the young man of her heart. Every anniversary is marked, so tradition says, by the reappearance on earth of her two suitors, who fight a ghostly duel over the spot where she lies. She was very beautiful, as her picture by Bush proves.

One Fanny Smith, of this city, has also left a breathless record. Her fascinations must have been legion for men and women who remember her become enthusiastic at the very mention of her name. One night she attended the theater in male attire and was arrested. (The story ought not to end here but it does.) Another time she borrowed a beggar baby and went a-begging along Fourth street, and from end to end of Main. This seems to have been a favorite stunt, for another Louisville belle of renown, also disguised herself as a beggar and went to her own father's office. She was ordered away, but persisted until her father gave her some money, saying: "I ought not to give you a cent, but there is something about you that reminds me of my daughter, so you can take this and go." To ride through the market houses on a prancing steed, scattering pedestrians and wrecking the stalls, was also a favorite prank of imperious beauty.

The Civil War.

Then the war came, and the Kentucky woman dropped her frivolities and showed that her hour of ease had not destroyed that heritage of valor bestowed upon her by the pioneer women. As is well-known, Kentucky was torn asunder by her neutrality, and the hearts of her women were broken by the division. Kentucky sent her full quota to both armies, and without ever a draft. Kentucky mothers and wives sent more men to the war than those of any other State. Scores of wives followed their husbands through unheard of perils, helping worthily, nursing the wounded, making clothing, cooking, in fact, doing with all their might whatever their hands found to do.

Not the least of the heroines were the women who stayed at home. Heroic deeds are related in prose and verse; tradition has handed by word of mouth many an unprinted anecdote of devotion and sacrifice. The dear sister who prayed for the South—

"O Lord, Thou knowest they have no quinine.
Grant they may not need it."

And the woman who denied her family sugar, coffee, meat and bread that the wounded enemy, sheltered at terrible risk in her house, should be fed, were animated by the same spirit. It is a long record of zeal, pluck and pathos.

In Louisville, the Christian Commission, a sort of Red Cross society, supplied food, clothing and nurses for needy prisoners and soldiers, impartially. The click of the knitting-needle was heard in every home. Thousands of socks and mittens and comforters were contributed. Garrets were ransacked and their contents distributed; in short, women gave their days and nights to the amelioration of the suffering caused by the evil times. The women who had led the easiest lives seemed better able to deny themselves luxuries that others might be fed, than their hardier, labor-trained sisters. In certain parts of the State they were arrested, imprisoned for sympathizing with the South, but nothing daunted them. When prisoners passed through Louisville the very children of the town stood in the streets with baskets of provender—fruit, tomatoes, bread, coffee, lemonade—furnished by their mothers from their own larders. Many a thirsty, footsore captive blessed our women as he marched through the hot sun to the old prison on Broadway.

* * *

Miss Emily Mason.

One of the most notable women living to-day is Miss Emily Mason. No account of Kentucky women would be worth reading were she omitted. She is in her ninety-second year, having been born in Lexington, Ky., October 15, 1815. She was living in Virginia at the time the war broke out and volunteered for hospital service. She was matron for five or six hospitals successively, and has probably saved more lives than any one woman living in the United States to-day.

When the war ended she published two volumes of "Poems of the War," which were sold from door to door by ragged and maimed soldiers, and from which she realized a nice sum. But Miss Mason has ever been of a prodigal nature. By the aid of friends in both North and South she collected fifty orphan girls from different parts of the South, clothed, educated and provided for them. All but one of these are still living—teachers, wives, mothers—holding in tender memory and gratitude, their friend in need, Miss Mason.

A few years after the war she went to France and taught in an American school for young ladies in Paris for fifteen years. She has since led an active life, conducting parties in foreign travel, teaching and writing. Her books are well known, especially her "Life of Robert E. Lee," her "Journal of a Young Lady of Virginia in 1798." Only three years ago, when in her eighty-ninth year, she contributed to the Atlantic Monthly "Memories of a Hospital Matron." Wherever she goes she is the recipient of marked honors. In her home at Washington she celebrated her last birthday, receiving attention from the first citizens of the land.

* * *

Mrs. Chapman Coleman.

The oldest daughter of John J. Crittenden, Mrs. Chapman Coleman, also showed her race in her daring action in bringing dispatches from the Confederate Minister in Paris, William Mason, to Jefferson Davis in Richmond. She had the dispatches sewed between the double soles of her shoes. She reached Louisville in safety, but suspicion being aroused, she changed shoes with her son's cousin, Miss Judith Venable, who succeeded in getting through the lines near Henderson, and delivered the dispatches to Jefferson Davis in Richmond. Her arrest was determined on when she returned, but a warning was sent to her on the margin of a newspaper by a prisoner, so that she remained with her relatives in Richmond until the close of the war.

Often with sons in opposing armies meeting face to face, with news of death, of fatal wounds, our women went quietly about their duties, ministering to the sick, feeding the hungry. Some mothers gave all their sons, and the close of the war saw many a Kentucky family with not a single male left.

Mrs. Basil Duke.

Mrs. Basil Duke saw the war in all its horrors from beginning to end, and has many memories of its hardships. Once for three days and nights she was in an open skiff on the James river with her two little babies. The men who were rowing her were arrested and she was left alone; but the Federal General, Ord, when he saw her plight and heard who she was, had her towed down the canal to Richmond and treated her with the utmost courtesy. Her portrait when she was Henrietta Hunt Morgan, painted by Reinhart, is here reproduced.

* * *

Any sketch of Kentucky during the war would be incomplete if the part the slaves played were omitted. Left in charge by their masters of those nearest and dearest to them their devotion was unswerving. Accustomed to the easiest of lives, they bore the burden of the family support, in many instances caring for the invalid members, managing the farms, replenishing the scanty larders. The relations between mistress and maid were of the closest character. Each helped and consoled the other, each felt the same anxiety for absent household heads; not a Kentucky woman of that time living to-day but can relate heroic instances of fidelity, and not one to-day but recognizes worth and honor when met in the fast decreasing ranks of the negro of the old days, and feels the same affection and kindness for them that were common before the war.

* * *

The New Woman.

In about the year 1787 a young girl of fifteen came from Fort Duquesne to Kentucky with her parents. Her name was Lucy Price, and she is known to thousands of Kentuckians as "Grandma Weisiger." Many living descendants honor her memory. Once in her youth, when on the way to visit friends in Chillicothe the party was attacked by Indians, she saved her life by jumping into the Ohio river and swimming all the way across. She was probably the first "new woman," for when her husband died she took charge of all his affairs and ran his business at a profit. He had started the first hotel in Frankfort, "The Weisiger House; at the Sign of the Golden Eagle." She it was who, when some members of the Legislature complained of the late hour of breakfast, had them all routed from their beds at 5 o'clock the next morning by the breakfast bell. Her eldest son was the first male child born in Frankfort. The beautiful portrait is by a Frenchman named Moise, who seems to have done a great business among the pioneer families of Kentucky. The Lindsays of Frankfort are her immediate descendants.

Margaret Howard Wickliffe at a tender age delivered the address of welcome to Gen. Lafayette when he visited Lexington. She belongs to one of the most illustrious families of the State. Robert Wickliffe, her father, was called "the old Duke," as much from his lavish way of living as from the fact that he was one of the descendants of the Duke of Monmouth. She married Gen. William Preston, who was a Louisville citizen of renown, a member of Congress, a United States Minister to Spain and a Confederate General. Her descendants are splendid types of the fourth and fifth generations of pioneers.

These and other instances are sporadic examples forecasting the future. The real entry of the "new woman" took place after the war when with no man to manage for her and often with no estate to manage she had to make a livelihood and bring up young children. And here the spirit of the pioneer blazes forth stronger than ever. Politicians in Washington were besieged for their influence in obtaining Government positions, the first woman newspaper reporter got her place and held it, the first woman newspaper correspondent opened a new field.

But our woman did not stop with authorship and Government positions. She went into business of every kind. As was but natural after the war society was somewhat disintegrated. Civilization paused to take stock and recuperate. Fortunes had to be repaired, the top wave went under and many new ingredients rose to the surface. Northerners had married into the State and new ways had superseded the old. Grave responsibilities had changed our women—there is a difference between the girl born to careless ease and one anxious for daily bread. But though broken, bruised, the recuperation was rapid and remarkable, the readjustment thorough. By the seventies Kentucky women became once more renowned. Wherever they went their beauty, their fine physiques, their brilliant wit attracted adulation and eulogy. Louisville during that decade showed dozens of beautiful women, anyone of whom would have been celebrated the world over had Louisville been London. Harmless, daring goddesses they were, respecting neither rank nor authority; idols of society their lightest bon mots lipped and enjoyed.

The Fifth Generation.

A wave of prosperity has reached to every part of the State. The Kentucky woman is in danger of being patted down into a model of accomplished conventionality. She no longer rides up a flight of stairs to poke her horse's nose over the desk of her lover; she risks not arrest by donning male attire; she takes no blood-curdling chances; no longer dares devoted swain to deeds of risk and valor. And romance is not what it was. No headlong runaways with pistol-cracking pursuit; no Lord Ullin's daughter business for our modern beauty. She plays tennis and golf, she attends "functions," she studies character and fascinates by her mentality as much as by her physical charm. Occasionally one will break over the traces, use strong language and perhaps smoke a cigarette—but deal with her leniently, for even this may be traced to some pioneer ancestress who smoked a pipe. The old adventurous blood crops out now and then, but most of our young girls lead proudly decorous lives, free from all responsibility, tossing lightly the pleasure-bubble, feted, courted. Has the pioneer spirit at last been downed?

* * *

It Is Still Here.

Let her have as gay a girlhood as you please, lavish money upon her education, shield her from all sorrow, make rough places smooth, marry her brilliantly but let misfortune come and she is ready. Again the poineer blood comes to the surface, again she can dare and endure. And here may be found the chief trait of the Kentucky woman, a trait shown through each generation since Rebecca Boone took up her life in the first fortified station in Kentucky.

It is adaptability. She can take a place in the wilderness and make a home or she can go from a country turnpike-town in a sunbonnet and bare feet and preside in the house of a millionaire with nothing to guide her save her own good mind and her strong will. Better still, she can lose the millions and accomodating herself to changed conditions, go into active business, pay her husband's debts, educate her children and bring independence again into her life.

And she will never be without a wilderness and wild beasts to fight. She is now threatened by the foes of her own household. Her Indians to-day are the two chief products of the State. They may bring her much money, but they are breaking her heart by ruining her sons. But she is on guard, ready for a fight. Give her time and she'll conquer them with all the resourceful courage of Rebecca Boone herself.

INTERESTING STORIES FROM FAR AND NEAR.

SAMUEL GOMPERS, president of the American Federation of Labor, said in Washington, apropos of famous leaders:

"The best leaders issue always the fewest orders. They surround themselves with subordinates they can trust, and they leave all detail in these subordinates' charge. And what holds good of leaders holds good of superintendents, foremen and bosses. The best of them never annoy their men with useless orders.

"When I was a cigarmaker I knew a young man who would not have made a good overseer or leader. Like an old woman, this young man was continually ordering people about when there was no use for it.

"Once he sailed for England, leaving in his brother's charge a parrot that he was very fond of. When he got to England his old, pestering, interfering habit came on him, and, afraid that maybe his brother was neglecting the parrot, he sent over this cablegram:

" 'Be sure and feed parrot.'

The brother cabled back:

" 'Have fed him, but he's hungry again. What shall I do next?' "

THE chief smiled expectantly.

"Bring on the Rev. Winterbottom Jones," he said.

The butler drew near nervously.

"Sire," he faltered, "Brother Jones appears to be quite used up this morning."

"If he is," growled the chief, "some one has broken into the pantry, that's all. A leg and two ribs were left over last night—I remember it distinctly."

JOSEPH CHOATE, at a dinner in New York, described the pronunciation of the London cockney in an amusing manner.

Mr. Choate told how, in the past ten years the long "i" sound has taken precedence over all others in cockney speech, and in illustration he repeated a dialogue between an American tourist and the cockney conductor of one of the new motor-omnibuses.

"The tourist, a young woman," said Mr. Choate, "opens her pocketbook as the conductor approaches her, and says:

" 'A ticket, please.'

" 'Wot s'y, lydy?'

" 'I want a ticket.'

" 'Ware fur?'

" 'Why, to get up town.'

"The conductor looks annoyed.

" 'But ware to hup town?' he asks. Then, appealingly: 'Urry up, lydy. Don't tike all dye.'

" 'Notting Hill.'

" 'Notting 'ill, or Notting 'ill Gyte stytion?'

" 'Gyte station.'

"The conductor scowls at the young woman, for, unconsciously, she has mimicked his cockney pronunciation of the word 'gate.' Then he gives her her ticket and says:

" 'Ere you hare. And 'ere's your chynge. Mykyste.'

" 'Thank you. I am a-myking 'yste.'

"And the conductor, scowling as black as a thunder cloud, withdraws."

"IF YOU blind a bat," said a biologist, "the creature, somehow will still see. If you doubt this, consult Levy.

"Levy, the great authority, once removed the eyes of several bats, and covered the vacant sockets with leather patches. In this condition the bats flew about the room, avoiding the walls and corners, and, when a door was opened, they flew out of it without touching the jamb or the frame.

"Afterwards, in flying through a sewer that made a right angle, the bats turned at the proper point without brushing the walls, and they flew through threads suspended from the ceiling without touching them, though between the threads there was only an interval sufficient for their passage with spread pinions.

"Bats, living in the dark, have found their eyes almost useless, and have developed a sixth sense that takes the place of eyesight."

"SHE is a grass widow," said the professor, nodding in the direction of a lady with yellow hair.

"A 'grass' widow? Oh, professor, I didn't think you would use slang!"

" 'Grass' widow is not slang," said the professor stoutly. "It is, on the contrary, a very ancient and correct expression. It comes from the French 'grace.' It was originally written 'grace' widow. Its meaning is 'widow by courtesy.'

"There is nothing slangy or disrespectful in the term 'grace widow.' A widow may call herself that with propriety, and with propriety anyone may call her that."

"TOWNS, like swindlers, occasionally have aliases," said a letter carrier.

"For instance?"

"For instance, Constantinople. Its alias is Stamboul. As many letters to this city are addressed to Stamboul as to Constantinople.

"Then there is New York. Its alias is Manhattan. New York letters are often addressed to Manhattan.

"Jaffa has Joppa for its alias. Hull has for alias Kingston-on-Hull. Plymouth has Sutton.

"Ten, of course, every city has the name its native calls it, and a dozen other names that foreigners call it.

"Thus Naples, the Vesuvian town, is Napoli to the Neapolitans. Florence is Firenzi to the Florentines. Genoa is Genova to the Genoese. Venice is Venezia to the Venetians. Vienna is Wien to the Viennese. And so on indefinitely."

THE great expose writer of the ten-cent magazines died at last, and with much pomp, attended by an innumerable retinue, he ascended to Heaven's gate, and knocked peremptorily.

St. Peter, appearing at the wicket, said:

"I know you sir. I know you and your work well. Permit me, before opening this gate, to ask you one question."

"Ask, brother," said the other.

"Tell me, then," said St. Peter, in a slow, impressive tone: "Did you, when you studied the careers of Rockyfellow, Harmer and the rest, look impartially and justly, for the truth? Did you look as keenly for the good as for the evil in these men's lives? Or, searching only for sensational facts that you could sell, did you shut your eyes to the good? Did you look for the evil only?"

Now before Heaven's gate it is impossible for anyone, even a great expose writer, to lie.

And so this unfortunate fellow turned reluctantly away, and in a trice nine imps with whips of flame appeared, and drove him, shrieking and screaming, down toward a black orifice whence issued flames, black smoke and a sulphurous odor.

BUTCHERS are the world's best weight guessers. The butcher's difficult trade gives him a skill in weight-guessing that is almost incredible.

It is a commonplace thing in a meat shop, to see a butcher seize hold on a huge round of beef, and slash off with a great knife four pounds just, or two and a half pounds just, or six pounds just, according to the order.

The buyer of meat wants to get the weight he asked for, no more and no less, and he wants this weight in one piece, not in one big piece and two or three little ones.

To satisfy the buyer the butcher has been compelled to acquire extraordinary skill in judging how much a certain portion of a round of meat weighs, and in cutting off that portion smoothly and accurately.

THE highest price ever paid for poetry was $1,875 a line—$15,000 for an eight-line poem.

James Smith, one of the authors of "Rejected Addresses," wrote it. Smith met one night at dinner in London Strachan, the famous English printer. Strachan, what with old age and gout, was most infirm. Indeed, he could hardly walk. But his mind was exceedingly powerful and brilliant, and he talked so well that Smith, on his return home, wrote the following doggerel about the old man:

Your lower limbs seemed far from stout
When last I saw you walk;
The cause I presently found out
When you began to talk.
The power that props the body's length,
In due proportion spread,
In you mounts upward, and the strength
All settles in the head.

Though this was undeniably rank poetry and ranker flattery, it pleased Printer Strachan so well that he added to his will a codicil giving Smith $15,000.

MANY KENTUCKIANS PLANNING TO CELEBRATE IN THE BLUEGRASS COUNTIES OF THEIR NATIVITY.

From All Parts of the United States They Will Return Home, Attend the Great Love Feast at Louisville and Then Go to the Places Where They Grew From Childhood to Mature Estate.

WHEN the festivities which begin to-day in Louisville have ended, the returning Kentuckians will have further celebration offered them. Many who are coming back to their mother State will visit Louisville first, and then the counties of their nativity. In many of the counties of the State elaborate preparations have been made for the entertainment of those coming home from the four corners of the country.

Presented herewith is a list of counties in which there will be celebrations, with an idea of the entertainment that has been planned in each:

* * *

Adair County.

Columbia, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Columbia is putting on a new dress, getting ready for the Home-coming, June 19. All the streets are being cleaned of rubbish, many residences are receiving fresh paint, and lawns and parks are looking most inviting. The meeting will be held at the fair grounds, where there is shade and water in abundance and a good stand, which will seat four thousand people. About four hundred former Adair county citizens are expected, and they will be given a royal welcome. The opening address will be delivered by Lieut. Gov. J. R. Hindman, of this city, who will be followed by responses by Col. E. L. Doheney, of Paris, Tex.; Hon. James F. Reed, of Fort Smith, Ark., and Judge J. P. Winfrey, of Evansville, Ind. Short speeches will also be made by R. J. Monday, of the Columbia bar. A brass band has been employed and an enjoyable time is anticipated and dinner will be prepared for everybody.

* * *

Anderson County.

Lawrenceburg, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The many sons and daughters of old Anderson who are making their marks in the different parts of the country will return home during the week of June 17, and receive a cordial and hearty reception from their old acquaintances and friends. The functions complimentary to their homecoming will be purely informal, yet they will not lack any of the sentimentality of old-fashioned hospitality for which Anderson county is so justly famous. Addresses of welcome will be delivered by prominent citizens at the courthouse, and many responses will be made by her distinguished sons and daughters. Drives will be taken over the county to the fine bluegrass stock farms, and several manufactories and industries, and the festivities will be closed with an old-fashioned Kentucky barbecue and reception. The Hon. Champ Clark, of Missouri, one of the county's most famous sons, writes that he will be unable to accept the invitation home on account of a press of business engagements. During the Home-coming Week at Louisville Anderson-county citizens will be welcomed at headquarters by Maj. John P. McWilliams, Commissioner T. J. Ballard and Mrs. Mary Dowling Bond and Miss Katherine Dowling, two of Lawrenceburg's most beautiful and attractive young women.

* * *

Boyle County.

Danville, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Danville will not have a regular formal Home-coming celebration, following the glorious week at Louisville. However, arrangements are on foot and will be completed within the next few days for an informal reception, to be held at the courthouse, on the afternoon of June 18, at which time several brief speeches will be made by local orators. After this, a general love feast will follow, when the old will meet old and the new will be introduced. Every home in this county and city will be thrown wide open with the proverbial latchstring on the outside for the returning wanderers, and everyone will be warmly welcomed.

One reason why this city has decided to hold no formal reception is that Central University will hold its alumni banquet this year at the Galt House, Louisville, instead of Danville, and nearly 80 per cent. of those who have left this city and county are members of the Alumni Association, and they will be given the glad hand, and will have exploited to them all that has happened since they left little Britain, not only in the college, but in the town and county. Centre College will have in its alumni some of the most prominent men, who will be in attendance at the Home-coming in Louisville, some of whom are: Justice Harlan, former Governor T. T. Crittenden, Vice President Adlai E. Stevenson, Mr. Breckinridge Jones, John W. Yerkes and others. Dr. F. W. Hinitt, president of Central University, will be toastmaster of the alumni banquet.

* * *

Clark County.

Winchester, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Great preparations are being made to properly receive the ex-Clark county people who shall visit during Home-coming. During the week at Louisville Clark county headquarters will be at the Armory building. M. T. McEldowney, Commissioner for this county, will be assisted by his wife and also by Miss Mary Lane, the maid of honor, for the county.

Capt. H. T. Strother, J. P. Holloway and Joe R. Martin will also assist Mr. McEldowney at Louisville on Tuesday, June 19, following the Home-coming week at Louisville an old-fashioned basket picnic will be given near this city to welcome the ex-Clarkites. Committees of both sexes are hard at work, and unlimited supplies of country ham, southdown lambs, chickens, cakes, pies, etc., have been promised. Ice water, lemonade and such things will be plentiful, and there will be music in abundance. Wm. H. French, of the local bar, will make the address of welcome. Subject, "Our Home." H. Deweese Ecton, of Minneapolis, Minn., will respond. Subject, "My Former Home." Hon. A. Floyd Byrd will also speak on "My Adopted Home." Hon. Abram Renick is at the head of affairs, and this picnic promises to be the biggest thing of the kind held in Winchester for a long time. Madison and adjoining counties will have a big picnic the preceding day, and many will attend both.

The Commercial Club this afternoon made arrangements for locating here the plant of the Young Manufacturing Company, which will start a factory for making pants and overalls. They will work from thirty-five to 100 hands, principally girls, and will increase their capacity as occasion may require.

Winchester, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The people of Clark county have set apart Tuesday, June 19, at Home-coming day for former Clark county citizens who will visit Kentucky during Home-coming Week. A tremendous basket picnic will be given at Winchester in honor of the visitors, and a cordial invitation is extended to everybody to attend. A programme has been prepared and a general good time is expected. The officials of the county and city and Commercial Club of Winchester are at the head of the affair. The invitation as sent out, containing the programme, is as follows:

You are cordially invited to spend Tuesday, June 19, in Clark county, Kentucky, that date having been selected as Clark County Home-coming Day. On that day we hope to have all former Clark county citizens, with their families, as the guests of our city and county at a basket picnic to be given in honor of your Home-coming. We shall certainly expect you to come and bring your family and friends, as we want to see you again and want you to see our people and talk over the "good old days."

ABE RENICK, Chairman Executive Committee Clark County Home-coming Day.
JAMES H. EVANS, County Judge.
W. A. ATTERSALL, Mayor City of Winchester.
B. R. JOUETT, President Winchester Commercial Club.

* * *

Christian County.

Hopkinsville, Ky., June 10.—[Special.]—Hopkinsville and Christian county will gladly and heartily welcome all former citizens who are attracted to Kentucky by Home-coming Week. Mayor Meacham has issued the following proclamation: "To Home-comers: While Hopkinsville has not attempted to provide any formal welcome to the Home-comers, leaving it for Louisville to do the honors for the whole State, nevertheless the people of Christian county stand ready to welcome with open arms the sons and daughters who may come back home to get a drink out of the old rock spring, now turned into a well twenty feet beneath a railroad track. If you are yearning for another glimpse of God's country, a land filled with milk and honey and fruits and flowers, with granaries bulging with grain and fat cattle grazing on every hillside, while the goose with a whole flock of goslings is hanging high over it all, come, ye weary prodigals, come; there's a hand clasp, a square meal and a 'God bless you' for all."

During the great reunion there will be an attractive exhibition at headquarters in the Louisville Armory, with large portraits of distinguished former citizens, both living and dead, and an interesting collection of old relics.

* * *

Daviess County.

Owensboro, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Tentative arrangements are being made by the Owensboro Business Men's Association for the entertainment of former citizens of Daviess county when they return to Kentucky to take part in the Home-coming festivities at Louisville. J. T. Graffith, Home-coming Commissioner for Daviess county, will go to Louisville the first of next week, and he will keep the local committee advised as to the number of former Daviess county citizens who will come to Owensboro from Louisville. If a large number of former Daviess county citizens return home next week it is the intention of the Owensboro citizens to meet them at the Union station with the Third Regiment band and escort them down in the city. A reception will probably be given at the Rudd House.

* * *

Fayette County.

Lexington, Ky., June 12.—The Home-comers will receive a warm welcome to Fayette county. Hon. Solomon Van Meter, commissioner appointed by the Governor for this county, has appointed for the Home-coming exercises, which will be held here June 17 and 18, immediately following the grand celebration in Louisville, as a City Committee Judge D. Gray Falconer, John Skain, M. C. Alford and Len Cox, Judge Falconer being chairman.

Miss Henrietta Paul, whom Mr. Van Meter appointed hostess for Lexington and Fayette county, has appointed Misses Laura Estill and Margaret Davis as maids of honor.

There will be a delegation of perhaps 500 people from Lexington to the Home-coming at Louisville and they will make headquarters at the booth which they will have at the armory. This will be presided over by the fairest daughters of the Bluegrass, and all visitors from this region and especially from Fayette county are expected to come there, register and be made at home.

The entertainment here which will follow Louisville is expected to begin on Saturday, June 16, as many visitors will not stop at Frankfort for the dedication. For their entertainment Saturday afternoon there will be matinee trotting races and other forms of entertainment. On the following Sunday every minister in Lexington will preach on the Home-coming and on Monday fifty of Fayette county's most prominent citizens will hold open house for the visitors at the Union Club rooms in the Phoenix Hotel. Automobiles and carriages will await the pleasure of the visitors who will be accompanied by members of the committee to the stock farms and other points of interest in the city and county.

* * *

Franklin County.

Frankfort, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The people of the county of Franklin and the city of Frankfort are preparing to greet on the last day of Home-coming Week not only all former Kentuckians, but all residents of the old Commonwealth who have an interest and a pride in the new Kentucky Capitol, the laying of the corner stone of which they deem an event of as much importance and public interest as any occurrence of the whole week, in the metropolis of the State or elsewhere. No other celebration has been planned for the hundred odd residents of this city and county who have signified their intention of turning their steps homeward, and none other could fill the hearts of the visitors with as much pride and love for the old home as the laying of the corner stone of a building for which her people have been fighting for more than a quarter of a century.

Saturday, June 16, is to be Frankfort's gala day, and her people are expecting the largest crowd which has been here for a dozen or more years. Not a distinguished Kentuckian has been overlooked in the matter of being invited, and nearly every man, woman and child has been placed upon some committee or other, formed to insure a pleasant time for all who come here for the occasion. The banks and merchants have decreed a half holiday. An elaborate programme of exercises to mark the laying of the corner stone has been arranged. The stone is already here, and in position to be laid by the hand of Gov. Beckham. The contractors for the building have everything in readiness. The programme of speakers contains the names of United States Senators, former Governors and State officials.

There will be no public gathering to mark the Home-coming here aside from this occasion. The families of absent Kentuckians are arranging pleasant days for them following the corner-stone laying, and many social events will mark the succeeding week.

* * *

Garrard County.

Lancaster, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Lancaster and Garrard county have done no little in furnishing various sections of the country both sons and daughters who have done credit to themselves and the place of their nativity by acting well their part in whatever vocation they have seen fit to follow. A number of these will attend the Home-coming in Lousville and will then visit their former homes in Garrard. It has been decided here to supplement the Home-coming of the Falls City by an appropriate entertainment in honor of these returning citizens. An address of welcome will be delivered by one of Lancaster's finest orators. W. O. Bradley, of Louisville, will be invited to make the response and pay his usual glowing tribute to old Garrard, both in his own behalf and all other Home-coming people. Other speakers have been included on the programme and committees have been appointed to carry into effect an elaborate social, literary and musical entertainment in honor of the return of Garrard's former residents.

* * *

Hardin County.

Elizabethtown, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Arrangements are being made upon a large scale for the Hardin county Home-coming, June 18 and 19. An old-fashion barbecue will be held at the Operahouse both days. The Daughters of the Confederacy will give an extensive reception at the residence of Mr. J. R. Brewers, which will probably be the grandest social event in the history of the city. The city will be profusely decorated. Pyrotechnical displays will be attractive features on the evenings of both days. Wehrley's band, of Louisville, has been engaged for the occasion. Hon. George W. Jones, of Montgomery, Ala., will address the Home-comers. Efforts are being made to have ex-Senator Lindsay and other speakers to make addresses. At least fifteen hundred Home-comers from other States are expected to visit their native county. The probable attendance from the county and from a distance is being estimated to range between 10,000 and 15,000 people.

* * *

Harrison County.

Cynthiana, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Plans for Home-coming day on June 19 for Cynthiana and Harrison county are practically all complete. A picnic and basket dinner, with burgoo on the side, will be given in the Megibbon woods near Cynthiana. Former Harrisonians who have gained fame in other States have stated that they would attend and will make speeches. Hon. Mark Smith, delegate to Congress from Arizona; E. C. Day, of Montana; Judge Peck, of Cincinnati; Representative A. O. Stanley, T. T. Forman, Lexington.

Fifteen hundred invitations were sent to former Harrisonians, five hundred replying that they would attend. Mayor F. S. Ashbrook, with the following chairmen of various committees, had the matter in charge: B. F. Goldnamer, G. M. Dickey, T. E. King, J. T. McCauley, Robt. Lyne, Jas. Dedman, Eugene Gragg. Wm. Adams is commissioner from this county for Home-coming in Louisville, and Col. W. M. Moore, vice commissioner; Mrs. Maud Ward Lafferty, hostess; Miss Anna May Adams, maid of honor. After the picnic a reception at the Elks' Home will be a feature, after which a ball at the operahouse will close the day's events.

* * *

Hart County.

Munfordsville, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The arrangement for the Hart county Home-coming are about completed. The date has been changed to Friday, June 22. An old-fashioned basket picnic will be given in the courthouse yard. A band of music has been engaged for the day of home-comers. A large crowd is expected.

Hart county people are in nearly every State of the Union, and a large number of them are expected to be here on that day. Gen. Buckner will deliver the address of welcome. Congressman Dave Smith, Joseph Altsheler, editor of the Thrice-a-Week New York World and other distinguished Hart county people will deliver addresses. Every returning Hart county person will receive the glad hand and will be made to regret they had the bad grace to leave their native heath.

* * *

Henderson County.

Henderson, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Henderson county is making elaborate preparations for the entertainment of her Home-coming sons and daughters at a barbecue to be given June 19 in the classic shades of Atkinson Park, one of the most beautiful pieces of woodland in this section of the Pennyrile district. It will be an old-fashioned Kentucky barbecue in the fullest sense of the word, and arrangements will be made for the entertainment of 700 people.

The Entertainment Committee of the Commercial Club has been working zealously for the past two or three weeks preparing to welcome the Henderson Home-comers, and the indications are that the commendable efforts will be crowned with success. Citizens generally are lending aid both financially and otherwise and all seem to be interested in this patriotic event.

There will be speeches by several of Henderson county's most noted orators on this occasion, and the Home-coming Hendersonians will have an opportunity to attend the Chautauqua which will be in session on the date above mentioned.

Pertinent to the Home-coming, Edward A. Jonas, Home-coming commissioner for Henderson county, has issued most unique invitations to the Henderson county Home-comers. This will be handsome printed and distributed to those who are expected to partake of Henderson county's hospitality. This invitation is as follows:

"To Home-coming Hendersonians, greeting: Whereas, it has been intimated that former Hendersonians are modest, which we do not believe; that they are retiring, which is beyond our fondest dreams, and that they are waiting to be asked, which would in itself disqualify them as home-born and home-bred citizens, now be it decreed by virtue of the mandate of J. C. W. Beckham, Governor, that we, Edward A. Jonas and Clyde Grandy, respectively commissioner and vice commissioner of Henderson county, and William H. Weaver, chairman of the Entertainment Committee, do hereby formally and officially, to say nothing of cordially and earnestly, urge and beg all former citizens of this county, whether they left it for their health or ours, whether they be man, woman or child, young or old, whether they be Governors or governed, trust magnates or trust busters, debutantes or oldest inhabitants, to be with us on Tuesday, the 19th inst., at Atkinson Park, in this city, where there will be a barbecue, buttermilk and other doings. Herein fail not. Edward A. Jonas, Clyde Grady, William H. Weaver."

* * *

Hopkins County.

Madisonville, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Great preparations are being made for Hopkins county Home-coming Week. It was decided to entertain the visitors for two days. The first day will be spent at Loch Mary, Earlington, where an old-fashioned barbecue will be held. The following day the Home-comers will be entertained by the hospitable people of Madisonville at the local fair grounds, where a general celebration will be had. The citizens of the county have donated liberally to the fund for entertainment, and a time long to be remembered is contemplated by all. A large crowd from Madisonville will attend the celebration at Louisville.

* * *

Larue County.

Hodgenville, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The citizens of Hodgenville and Larue county are perfecting their arrangements for entertaining their Home-coming visitors. While the committee having the matter in charge has not yet made a full report of the programme, it has been decided to have a basket picnic and Home-comers' reunion in the beautiful South Fork church, which adjoins the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln. Several prominent speakers have been invited and the Home-comers will be expected to give their experiences away from home, while our home people will tell them what has been the advancement of Kentucky and Kentuckians since they left here. This, the main feature of the exercises, will be conducted on the 22d.

* * *

Madison County.

Richmond, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Madison county arrangements for her grand Home-coming celebration embrace an all-day reunion on the Normal School campus, this city, on Monday, June 18. There will be addresses by four ex-Governors, two of whom are United States Senators, and by many other prominent visitors and residents. Music by Storm's Military Band, of Lexington. The feature of the reunion will be an old-fashioned Kentucky burgoo. In addition, the farmers' wives will provide a basket picnic dinner. There will be an abundance to eat, plenty of music, and oratory will flow freely all day long. Hon. David R. Francis will bring his six sons, Senator Stone, of Missouri, will bring his children and grandchildren; Judge Elbridge Broaddus, of the Missouri Supreme Court, will be on hand. Ex-Gov. Bradley, whose father was born here, may attend, and Gov. Beckham, who was educated here, has been urged to come. The programme follows: J. A. Sullivan, chairman; prayer, the Rev. Samuel Crutcher, of Texas, song, "My Old Kentucky Home," to be sung by the audience; addresses of welcome, Hon. W. B. Smith, introduced by Mayor C. E. Woods; music; address, Hon. David R. Francis, Missouri; music; address, Hon. Curtis F. Burnam, Kentucky; music; address, Hon. W. J. Stone, Missouri; music; "Burgoo;" music; address, Senator James B. McCreary, Kentucky; music; address, Hon. C. J. Bronston, Kentucky; music; address, Judge A. Rollins Burnam, Kentucky; music; short addresses, Col. J. W. Caperton, Judge B. M. Benton and other prominent citizens and visitors; farewell, Hon. Richard W. Miller; "Home, Sweet Home."

* * *

Mercer County.

Harrodsburg, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Harrodsburg will have her Home-coming day Tuesday, June 19, following Louisville's big event. It will be a great affair. The Commercial Club took hold of the movement two months ago and organized committees to cover the entire county. Ex-Mayor Hal Grimes was placed at the head of the Committee on Arrangements, City Attorney L. M. Smith at the head of the Committee on Invitation, James L. Isenberg at the head of the Finance Committee, L. B. Lanham, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., at the head of the Commissary Committee and Mayor C. D. Thompson at the head of the Reception Committee.

A splendid band has been engaged, speakers have been secured, Bluegrass cattle, sheep and swine have been contributed for the barbecue and baskets galore of picnic good things have been promised. It is confidently expected that one of the largest crowds ever seen here will be gathered at the City Park and Fair Grounds to welcome the sons and daughters of Mercer home. Among the speakers will be the Rev. Martin D. Hardin, son of Gen. P. Wat Hardin, who has earned and received recognition as one of the foremost preachers of the Southland, and Hon. Legsande Davis, who has taken rank as a leading lawyer of California. These two sons of Mercer are orators indeed, and they will be listened to with eager ears and cheered by loving and responsive hearts.

Arrangements are being made for a show of Mercer's fine horses at the Fair Grounds for the benefit of the visitors, and there will be many other things of interest. Many people from this county will attend the Louisville Home-coming festivities, but they will all return for Mercer's day of greeting to the wanderers who may return. Mercer county will be represented officially at the Louisville Home-coming by the Rev. M. V. P. Yeaman, commissioner; L. M. Smith, vice commissioner; Mrs. Letcher Riker, hostess, and Miss Haldon Hardin, maid of honor.

Meade County.

Brandenburg, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Brandenburg will celebrate Home-coming in a manner befitting the occasion. This happy event will take place Wednesday, June 20. The Entertainment Committee, appointed by the Brandenburg Commercial Club, composed of the Rev. A. J. Bennett, Dr. J. R. Fink, Dr. W. T. Miles, Dr. J. M. Hardin and J. L. Bishop, have arranged an attractive programme for the day. Ex-Gov. Thomas Crittenden, of Missouri, Norman Coleman, editor of the Rural World, St. Louis, and Hon. D. W. Fairleigh, of Louisville, will be the orators of the day.

Judge J. F. Woolfolk and Hon. J. D. Hardin will be masters of cermonies, and Hon. W. D. Ashcraft will deliver the welcome address. A big basket dinner will be spread in the courthouse yard. A brass band has been engaged for the day. The committee is preparing a splendid programme, which will be carried out to the letter.

* * *

Montgomery County.

Mt. Sterling, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Home-coming Commissioner R. M. Trimble has selected Mrs. R. G. Stoner as hostess for Montgomery county, and the hostess chose for her maid of honor Miss Louise Hoffman, the pretty daughter of Albert Hoffman.

There will be no special demonstration in this county, but 700 citizens and former residents are expected here to visit scenes of their youth and old homes. The latchstring of all the homes will be on the outside to all returning children, and the people prefer to give them the old-fashioned handshaking than to make a one-day's demonstration. Montgomery county extends to her children who have wandered away to "come and stay as long as you want to."

* * *

Monroe, Cumberland, Metcalfe and Barren.

Glasgow, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The counties of Monroe, Metcalfe, Cumberland and Barren have completed arrangements for Home-coming at Glasgow Saturday, June 16, that promises to be the biggest in Glasgow's history and 10,000 people from the four counties are expected to be here to meet their relatives from the West. The programme includes addresses by ex-Gov. P. H. Leslie, Hon. Benton McMillin, Hon. N. D. Thompson, Judge S. E. Jones, Hon. W. L. Porter, Hon. H. C. Gorin, William Baker, J. O. Ewing and J. W. Kinnaird. Seven hundred and fifty feet of tables have been erected in the courthouse yard, where a big basket dinner will be served and a table 100 feet long will be used for burgoo.

A horse show in the morning will be held on the square to show the visitors our fine stock. Two weddings will take place on the speakers' stand. One of the couples is from Barren county; the other is from Louisville. The last named couple accepted Secretary Murray's invitation to-day. The First regiment band, of Nashville, will accompany a choir of 500 voices in "My Old Kentucky Home" and other Kentucky songs. The local Knights of Pythias in uniform will keep open house on that day and entertain the Home-comers.

Ohio County.

Hartford, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Following the Home-coming celebration at Louisville next week, Hartford and Ohio county have arranged to entertain all former citizens of this county who may visit Louisville during the Home-coming, and with this idea in view have inaugurated a programme of entertainment for June 22 and 23, on which dates it is the hope of the local committee in charge that each and every former resident of the county who may be attracted to Louisville on account of the magnificent celebration which awaits them there will avail themselves of the opportunity extended by our citizenship to again visit Ohio county, and should they do so it goes without question that they will be royally entertained and enthusiastically received by the people of Hartford and Ohio county.

On the dates mentioned there will be a street fair held in Hartford, to the success of which the merchants and business men of the county have subscribed liberally. Invitations to this fair have been extended to the people of the county and it will doubtless be largely patronized, and former citizens of the county visiting Hartford on said dates will, therefore, be brought directly in contact with a large number of people of the county.

By the appointment of the Governor, W. H. Barnes, of Hartford will be present in Louisville during Home-coming Week, as the commissioner or representative of Ohio county, in which work he will be assisted by two or more young ladies of Hartford, who will hereafter be appointed by him as sponsors for and in behalf of the county.

* * *

Owen County.

Owenton, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Owen county is making great preparations to welcome home next week and week after her wandering sons and daughters. The committee who have the matter in charge, headed by Hon. June W. Gayle, his hostess, Mrs. W. P. Swope, and his maid of honor, Miss Mattie Belle Gayle, and vice commissioner, W. P. Swope, are arranging to entertain all of the Home-coming citizens of "Sweet Owen" with a big barbecue in Ford's woods on Tuesday, June 19, where old-fashioned Kentucky hospitality will be in evidence. Meats will be barbecued, burgoo of approved style will be made and under the spreading branches of our native woods a royal welcome will be given to all former citizens of Owen county who have returned once more to the "vine and fig tree" of their native home. After the barbecue and the reunion speeches will be made by many of the visitors. Those who have promised to be present and speak from a distance who formerly resided here are Hon. Joseph L. Rhinock, member of Congress from the Sixth congressional district of Kentucky; D. M. Lett, retired capitalist from Carrothersville, Ind., now ninety-four years old; Judge Thomas R. Gordon, of Louisville, Judge of the Circuit Court; Attilla Cox, president of the Louisville and Henderson railroad, of Louisville; Rev. S. L. Riley, of San Angelo, Tex.; Rev. J. S. Agee, of Caldwell, Idaho; Robert G. Ford, president of the Middlesboro National Bank, of Middlesboro. Speeches will also be made by our home people, Frank C. Greene, Commonwealth's Attorney; M. H. Bourn, Charles Strother, James G. Vallandingham, James H. Settle, J. H. Westover and W. P. Swope.

From invitations to which responses have been received it is expected that at least 500 former Owen county citizens will visit Owen county immediately following Home-coming Week in Louisville. Among them are bankers, lawyers, doctors and business men of all degrees and callings and of high and low estate. Owen county has 110 bank cashiers scattered all over the country, and most of them will be with us next week. The visitors will come from as far away as Los Angeles, Cal., and Seattle, Wash., and it is expected that Home-coming Week will mark an epoch in the history of Owen county.

* * *

Pulaski County.

Somerset, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Big preparations are being made by Somerset for the Pulaski county Home-coming, which will be Monday following the Louisville Home-coming, June 18. The following proclamation was issued by County Judge and Commissioner for Home-coming N. L. Barnett:

"Whereas, Kentucky having proclaimed a Home-coming [illegible] all former Kentuckians, Pulaski county urges her absent sons and daughters to again [illegible] the scenes of their childhood.

"Therefore, I, as County Judge of Pulaski county, Kentucky, and a commissioner of Pulaski County Home-coming Association, fix June 18, 1906, as a day of welcoming former Pulaskians, and I solicit, urge and request all resident Pulaskians to clothe themselves with the spirit of hospitality, fill the baskets and come to Somerset on June 18, 1906, prepared in mind and heart to extend the kindliest greetings and reawaken the joys of their y[illegible] They will be thrice welcome; our d[illegible] are open and we are anxious bey[illegible] measure to have them partake of [illegible] hospitality of their kindred and frie[illegible] We want to entertain them one day [illegible] Somerset, Ky., with an old-fashion[illegible] picnic. Here they will see familiar faces and receive such hand grasps as only warm-hearted Pulaskians can give to all visitors to the mother county.

"N. L. BARNETT,
"County Judge and Commissioner for Home-coming.

"V. P. SMITH,
"Director General.

"Attest: E. H. HANSFORD, Sec."

In pursuance to a called meeting of all citizens at the City Hall for the purpose of perfecting organization, the following committees were appointed:

Reception Committee—Dr. J. W. F. Parker, chairman; Director General V. P. Smith, Assistant Director General John A. L. Jasper.

Committee on Finance—V. P. Smith, chairman.

Committee on Invitations and Transportation—O. H. Waddle, chairman.

Committee on Publicity and Organization—W. J. Brown, chairman.

Cecil Williams, W. J. Brown and Woodson May, of this committee, sent out about 600 copies of the local newspaper Home-coming edition to all ex-Pulaskians throughout the United States. There have been already about 400 ex-Pulaskians sent their names as going to be present at the Pulaski Home-coming.

The largest crowd in the history of the county is expected and all committees are working hard preparing for the big celebration. The programme thus far arranged is as follows: Big barbecue and picnic; speaking by several distinguished orators at Crystal Park in the morning. At noon the laying of the corner stone of the Carnegie library, with impressive ceremonies. Indian ball game at 3 o'clock. In the evening a big reception and general handshaking. Somerset bids you welcome and she is going to give you a public entertainment for one day and evening.

There are hundreds of homes in the city and county that will have the latchstring on the outside and a warm welcome for you within. Home-coming Commissioner J. C. Parker appointed as his assistants in representing Pulaski county at the Louisville Home-coming vice commissioner, Capt. Ed M. Porch; hostess, Mrs. V. B. Vaughn; maid of honor, Miss Nora Shepherd. These are representatives of the old and distinguished families of the pioneer class, whose names will have a familiar sound to absent Pulaskians.

Shelby County.

Shelbyville, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Every detail for the celebration of Friday, June 15, in honor of former residents of Shelbyville has been arranged, and Shelby countians are anxiously awaiting the arrival of the Home-comers. The celebration, which consists of an old-fashioned barbecue and basket picnic, will be given on the grounds of the historic Shelby county Fair Grounds east of town. The Shelbyville Commercial Club is in charge of the affair and has raised a fund of $1,000 in cash, besides donations of live stock and eatabes, to provide for the visitors' entertainment. The programme will consist of an address of welcome by Congressman G. G. Gilbert. Maj. J. Franklin Bell, Chief of Staff of the United States army, a native of this county, will make the response for the Home-comers. Gov. J. C. W. Beckham and Senator McCreary have been invited to make addresses and both are expected to be present. The speeches will be followd by the barbecue and an exhibition of blooded stock, the product of Shelby county. Five or six thousand people are expected to participate in the celebration and nothing will be spared to make the welcome a happy and joyous occasion. The entire county is imbued with the Home-coming spirit and people are as one man in working to make the celebration surpass any former event in the history of Shelby county.

Woodford County.

Versailles, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Plans are practically completed for the Woodford Home-coming which is to be held in this city under the auspices of the Versailles Commercial Club, June 19 to 21, the week following the Kentucky Home-coming at Louisville. Acceptances received from those to whom invitations were sent indicate that 700 or 800 former residents will be here. In addition to these practically everybody in Woodford county and many people from adjoining counties are expected to be in Versailles Tuesday, the 19th.

The chief feature of the opening day will be an immense barbecue with burgoo and basket dinner. An address of welcome will be delivered by the Hon. Lewis A. Nuckols, of Versailles; Hon. Joseph T. O'Neal, of Louisville, is expected to respond on behalf of former residents of Woodford living in Kentucky, and Hon. Joseph A. Guthrie, of Kansas City, will speak for the former residents living outside the State. All former residents will then be given an opportunity to make five or ten-minute talks, giving their experiences since leaving Woodford. Wednesday, the 20th, there will be carriage drives in the country, and in the afternoon the ladies of Woodford county will hold a public reception at Margaret Hall. The festivities will close with a grand ball Thursday night. A first-class band of music has been engaged for the three days. There will be promenade concerts and a number of smaller entertainments.

The Board of Control in charge of the Home-coming consists of J. W. Newman, D. T. Thornton, M. P. Lancaster and W. O. Davis. Samuel G. Atkins is chairman of the Entertainment Committee, and E. T. Young, chairman of the Finance Committee.

Warren County.

Bowling Green, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Extensive preparations are being made for the local Home-coming Week, following the big event in Louisville. It is estimated nearly 2,000 former Bowling Green and Warren county people will be present during the week. The Knights of Pythias, of this city, are in charge of the arrangements, and every home-comer is assured of a royal good time. The committee has arranged twenty-one entertainments, three a day for the visitors and those coming back will not have a dull moment. The date of the reunion here is from June 18 to 25.

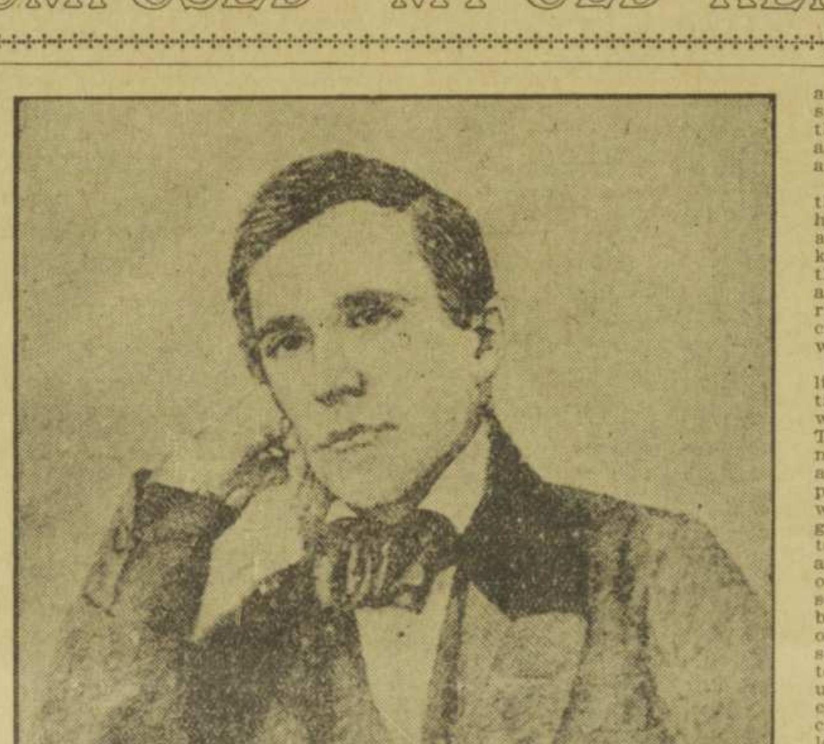

THE MAN WHO COMPOSED "MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME."

THE erection of a monument to the memory of Stephen Collins Foster, composer of "My Old Kentucky Home," is a tribute well merited by the man who has helped to make Kentucky famous the world over. A number of the States have in later years found temporary fame in songs, but the songs themselves are of the machine-made order, written principally for a catchy title, and their montetary value while they remain popular, but not destined to go down to posterity in the list of vocal classics as is "My Old Kentucky Home." The reason is simple: Foster wrote from the heart, not from a rhyming dictionary, and therefore his compositions appeal directly to the hearts of his listeners and will live where the others soon sink into oblivion.

"My Old Kentucky Home" tells of native land; it cries America as loudly as "The Star Spangled Banner" or "Dixie," and there is nothing in it that breathes of war, but only the beauty and simplicity of the old plantation life. There is an exquisite sincerity in the words; a lingering sweetness in the music, with that pathetic undercurrent of sadness and phophecy which renders the song all the more appealing.

At Federal Hill, near Bardstown, where he was visiting, Foster found the inspiration for "My Old Kentucky Home," and, although he composed many songs before it and many after it, it has become his best-known and best-beloved, with, perhaps, the single exception of "Old Folks at Home," or as it is more familiarly salled "Swanee Ribber." It is said that he wrote the latter when a feeling of homesickness was upon him and that he was prouder of it than any other of his compositions.

Every Kentuckian is sorry that Stephen Foster is not a son of the Bluegrass State; it would be a great honor. But, after all, what special difference does it make where a genius is born or where he dies? Nature seemingly has no favorite spot and selects the birthplace and environment at random. But if Foster was not so fortunate as to be born in Kentucky he was at least a true patriot of his country, and first opened his eyes on this world in Pittsburg, Pa., on our great national holiday, July 4, 1826. He was the seventh in line of descent, there being eight children in the family, and seemed to take to music from his very babyhood. As early as his seventh year he had mastered the flageolet without a teacher, and as he grew older many instruments gave up their sweetness to his touch. The musical temperament was highly developed in Foster, and he might have won renown as a performer had he chosen, but his chief delight was in composing, and playing became a mere pastime, not a profession.

STEPHEN C. FOSTER.

It is said of him, that as a student of rudimentary education, the young Stephen was not a shining success, the drowsy hum and general tedium of the schoolroom proving irksome to his erratic nature, and frequent gaps in his record of attendance testified his love of the woods and fields that lured him from prosy books to the larger and more satisfying study of the open country. Who shall say he was not the gainer thereby, and that we who have the pleasure of his songs, are not? He read from the universal book of Nature, and scene and sentiment bubble and ripple through his melodies as rhythmically and really as the brooks and rivers he sings about.

When he was thirteen, a slight, dark-eyed lad, he went to Towanda, where his brother William, was engaged in work. He then attended a small college at Athens, Pa., for a year or more, and here he gave the first evidence of the genius that afterward marked his productions. He composed a march and at the college commencement had it performed by a quartet of flutes, himself being one of the performers. "Tioga March" was the name of this first piece, and although it displayed much talent on the part of the youthful composer, it was never published, the manuscript of it was lost, and nothing save the name remains.

Later he went to Jefferson College, but here also he revealed the restless and reckless spirit that was part and parcel of him. He showed a marked preference for the study of German, French and music, to the detriment of the rest of the course. When not away from the college grounds wandering and dreaming amongst the hills, he was studying musical harmonies. Everything he accomplished was by snatches and at odd intervals, and such a thing as routine work was impossible to him.

A brother once remarked of Stephen that "melodies seemed to float through his brain. An idea would strike him and he would note it down. I have known him to get up in the middle of the night, light a candle and jot down a dozen bars of some melody that was ringing in his ears. After he had it completed to his satisfaction he would write words to suit the notes."

Foster's first composition to be published was a serenade, "Open Thy Lattice, Love," the music alone being his work; this was at the age of sixteen. The next year appeared his first negro melody, "Louisiana Belle," both words and music being his own. From the peculiar appropriateness of both his words and melodies, one would readily get the notion that Foster had come in touch with the "children of bondage" and knew the plantation darky and the oddities of ante-bellum life; but that seems to be a mistake, at least in the beginning, for he had produced several of his negro songs before he had ever set foot in the South. He just seemed to possess an intuitive knowledge and understanding of the negro nature, to catch the irresponsible joys of their cabin life, to feel the pathos of their lot and to weave it all into songs wherein there was no biased protest or sting.

Many of his songs Foster gave away, placing no particular value upon them and not at the time writing for gain, but for the simple love of expressing himself in music. Two songs—"Oh, Susanna" and "Old Uncle Ned"—he presented to a former teacher in his family, who was going into the publishing business in Cincinnati; and years afterward he confessed that those two songs were the nucleus of the business enterprise and that not less than $10,000 was realized from their sale.

But when about twenty-two Foster began to derive a very respectable income from his ballads, and so he turned his attention to writing songs as a means of livelihood, it being more to his taste than any other work he had tried. He had already put twenty-five songs before the public when he entered into a contract with a New York firm to publish his compositions. In 1850 he wrote "Nellie was a Lady," besides others of lesser note, and in the summer of 1851 brought out "Old Folks at Home." The last mentioned was written a verse at a time, with days and sometimes weeks intervening. A brother tells an anecdote of how he came to use the Sewanee, the whole thing being written and waiting for a name for the river. One day he entered the brother's office and said:

"I want a good river name. I have tried Yazoo and several more, but they do not suit. It must have two syllables and be a Southern stream."

"I took down an atlas," continued Morrison Foster, who related the incident, "and we began a search. I chanced upon the little stream on the western side of Florida called Sewanee."

"'That's it, that's just the thing!'" exclaimed Stephen in an ecstacy, and he snatched a pen and filled up the blanks in the manuscript. It seems a bit curious that he was never in that section of the South, and never saw the river he immortalized. It has often been asserted that Foster wrote "Old Folks At Home" as a rival to "Home Sweet Home," but statements of his relatives deny any such intention, and as it was a composition peculiarly his style, it is doubtful if any one will give such a desire on his part any credence.

"Old Kentucky Home" was the twentieth of Foster's melodies, and "Old Black Joe," apearing in 1860, was the last negro song he ever wrote, afterwards confining himself to sentimental ballads entirely.

Foster's death occurred in New York, January 13, 1864, alone in a hospital, his wife being at the time in Pittsburg. According to one of his friends he was taken ill with fever, which left him in a debilitated condition. While walking across the room at his hotel he fainted and fell, cutting an ugly gash in his head, and in his weakened state, the shock to his system produced effects from which he never rallied. When the remains were taken home to Pittsburg for burial, the Pennsylvania railroad placed a special car at the disposal of his family. A band of musicians met the cortege at the cemetery gate and played "Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming," and as the casket was lowered from sight "Old Folks At Home" was impressively rendered.

And Throws Much Light on Assassination of Dr. B. D. Cox.

Names James Hargis and Ed Callahan as Chief Conspirators In Two Murders.

DECLARES ALEX HARGIS IS AN INNOCENT MAN.

[Copyright applied for.]

Cynthiana, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The confession of Curtis Jett, of which rumors have been published for several days, was to-day given out by eJtt's attorneys for exclusive publication in the Courier-Journal. It is a remarkable story, giving, as it does, complete details of the murder of James Cockrill and the assassination of James B. Marcum and throwing some important light on the assassination of Dr. B. D. Cox.

Jett says he, John Smith and John Abner killed James Cockrill; that Robert Deaton went after Abner and Smith to aid in the murder and that Elbert Hargis, James Hargis, Ed Callahan, Jesse Spicer and Bill Britton are the men who formed the conspiracy.

Starting out with these broad statements he enters extensively into details of the murder and under skillful examination by Attorney J. Stanley Webster, lays bare every feature of the conspiracy and the events before and after the murder.

He then confessed to the murder of James B. Marcum, which, he says, was at the instance of James Hargis and Ed Callahan, declaring that the pistol with which he did the shooting was furnished him by Callahan for the purpose. He says B. J. Ewen told the truth about the killing.

Jett's statement in regard to the assassination of Dr. Cox is little less sensational than his assertions in regard to the other murders. He says he was at the jail and heard three shots, after which the telephone rang. He went to Alex Hargis' house and Hargis asked what the shooting was. Jett continues the story in these words:

"I said I didn't know, and Uncle Alex said, 'let's go down and see if Jim or any of them are hurt;' Uncle Alex stopped at Jim's garden fence, I guess he was afraid to run in, but I was fearless and didn't care you know, and I went in to the yard, and in the shadow of the smoke-house—moon as bright as day, I shall never forget it—stood Ed Callahan, Jim Hargis, Bill Britton, Jess Spicer and Elbert Hargis, with two shotguns; I saw no pistols."

Jett closes his confession by saying that he has told the "plain truth, nothing more and nothing less." He relieves Alex. Hargis of any complicity in the Cockrill and Marcum murders, saying "he is an innocent man."

JETT'S COMPLETE STORY OF JACKSON CRIMES

As Furnished To His Attorneys For Exclusive Publication In the Courier-Journal.

Confession of Curtis Jett as to the killing of James Cockrill and James Marcum, and Jett's statement of important information concerning the killing of Dr. Cox:

In the presence of Atorney J. Stanley Webster, Sam Jett and the official stenographer of the Harrison Circuit Court Curtis Jett, on this the 9th day of June, 1906, made the following sworn confession as to the murder of James Cockrill and James Marcum and also stated what he knew of the murder of Dr. Cox.

* * *

Cockrill Confession.

Me and John Smith and John Abner are the men that killed Jim Cockrill, and Bob Deaton is the man that went after Abner and Smith. Elbert Hargis, James Hargis, Ed Callahan, Jess Spicer and Bill Britton are the men that conspired. Cockrill and I had that shooting, you know, at the Arlington Hotel, and he and Tom Cockrill had undertook to arrest Jim Hargis, and after that we, Judge Hargis, Ed Callahan and I, fixed it up to kill him; that was about a week before he was killed. I wanted to meet him in the street and fight it out with him and kill him, but Hargis and Ed Callahan suggested the other way. That was a day or probably two days after we had the shooting at the hotel. They suggested sending for and getting Abner and Smith and Jim Hargis sent Bob Deaton in a day or two after these fellows, and they came to town on Saturday night before Cockrill was killed, between midnight and daylight. I had a room in the old office building across the street from the Hargis store, and Judge Hargis slept in the store office by himself, so we would know where to find him; these men come there between midnight and daylight and the Judge was hard to wake. Elbert Hargis and me were sleeping in my room, and in trying to wake Judge Hargis they waked us. After they got us awake Elbert and I went down and we waked Judge Hargis and then we taken their horses to Judge Hargis' barn and put them up and they went up in the Judge's office with him. After we tended to the horses we come back and went up there in the office, where Jim Hargis and these men were and we drank a good deal and I got pretty full and pretty soon went on back to bed, and Elbert Hargis and them went to the hollow below Miller branch about a mile below town, the hollow that empties across where the big rock is. Elbert goes home from there and I stays in town, and the next morning Jim Hargis wakes me early and tells me to go and take the men something to eat, and I said, "will you send it from the house?" And he said: "No; the women might suspicion something." He fixed a basket of things out of the store and I took it and went to the hollow and whistled and they answered and come down and got the things and eat them. In the meantime Elbert Hargis had come down there on his horse and I suggested to Elbert to take them to his home and let them stay there and come to town Sunday night after dark. He said the cook was gone and there was nobody there but grandma. They had to go through a cornfield and the corn was up high, and they pulled off their shoes and waded the river and went up to the graveyard. Elbert and I goes. He had come there on his horse and I don't know whether we waded the river or rode back, but we was going on to the house first to see if any one was there but grandma. There wasn't anybody there but her, and I went back and gave those men the signal to come on, and they come to the house and went upstairs into the back room, a kind of attic, and stayed there all day and until after dark. I told my grandmother they were dodging the officers and wanted to hide. Sunday we all goes to town after dark, and these men goes into the old Sheriff's office at the top of the back steps in the Courthouse. They stayed there all night and the next day I carried them beer and things to eat. Before Jim Cockrill was killed Jim Hargis had gotten word that he would be there on Monday. I don't know how he got the word, but he had heard that Cockrill had passed down the road, and before Jim was killed Jim Hargis sent Bill Britton into Fleenor's office at the foot of the steps to keep people from going upstairs if they attempted to make a rush on us, you know, and Callahan and Jim Hargis told me: "You had better go up there. These men don't know Jim Cockrill." And Jim Hargis said to me: "Don't you shoot nary shot." I goes up there and taps on the door three times—my signal—for them to let me in. They opened the door and I took them to the window. This occurred after dinner and Cockrill was in town. We went to the window and Smith and me fired from the first window next to the Crawford building and nearest Main street, and Abner shot from the window on the same side but further down from Main street. I had a thirty-two and Smith had—I dont 'know whether he had a thirty-eight or not—but Smith or Abner one had a thirty-eight and the other had a forty-four Winchester rifle. Then I fired the first shot, I don't know which of them shot the second; Jim was standing with his hand against the post; I shot the first shot and they the next; Smith was standing kind of behind me with the end of his gun near my face and his last shot almost burned my face and I abused him for it right there. On the morning before the shooting I was standing in front of Jim Hargis' store talking to Jim, and he noticed the shutters on the windows in the courthouse were open and it made the room too light, and he told me to go over there and shut the shutters so the room would be darker, and I went and closed the shutters; I then went back and he said "that was all right." The reason given for not wanting me to fight it out with Cockrill was that he thought Jim Cockrill was a bad man and that he might kill me. Before the shooting, but after we come out of the old Sheriff's office, I locked the door to that office and put the key in my pocket, and after the shooting, you know, I said, "You take this key and let me get down in the street,' and I slipped down the stairway on the banisters—that is why no one heard me coming down. I went out the side door and pulls my pistol and goes on around and goes into Hargis' store and on up stairs and when I got to the top of the stairs there is a pile of men's clothing there and Jim Hargis and Doug Hays was standing leaning on this pile of clothing just inside, and Hargis says, "Curt, go back to that courthouse and for God's sake don't let anyone go in." Then I goes back there and guards that courthouse, and I would have died there before I would nave let anyone go in where these men were, I expect. I taken these men beer and whisky all the evening. That night after dark, that is, after the shooting, probably 8, 9 or 10 o'clock, we gets their horses and Elbert Hargis and me get them down from the courthouse ihto Hargis' store by way of the back stairway to the courthouse—the ladder that was referred to in the trial wasn't used at all; it is my opinion that it had been there a week or more. Elbert suggested that we had better go in front of them about five minutes to see if the way was clear for them to cross the bridge. We went down Jail street and then straight to the river and crossed the bridge to the far side from Jackson and they galloped down on their horses and lent over and bid us good bye and left. They went to Callahan's that night and stayed until the next day, from what they told me afterward. That is all I know about this case.

The day that Cockrill and I had that shooting was the first time Jim Hargis ever talked to me about killing Cockrill, and that was in his store. Alex. Hargis never mentioned such a thing to me in his life and always tried to keep down trouble; he is an innocent man. I will shield no man and convict no innocent man if I die before the sun goes down.

Questions Propounded To Jett By Attorney J. Stanley Webster.

Did Callahan ever say anything to you about killing Cockrill?

Ans.—We was all talking about it there in a bunch; I mean in Hargis' store and office and he was present.

Ans.—I am not positive.

Ques. 3—Had you and Callahan talked about this before the killing?

Ans.—Yes, and Callahan went down the railroad and come back on the same train that Cockrill did that day, but Hargis did all the planning.

Ques. 4—Who first told you that Cockrill was in town?

Ans.—Jim Hargis seemed to know it two or three days before; the day of the killing I went to his house for dinner and he told me Cockrill was coming in on that 11:30 train. I think Jim's wife was suspicious, for she asked me what was the trouble.

Ques. 5—Who furnished the guns?

Ans.—Jim Hargis, out of his office.

Ques. 6—Did B. F. French have anything to do with this killing?

Ans.—No, sir; that man never advised me or mentioned this trouble; he may be guilty, but I don't know it. I never heard tell of it.

Ques. 7—Who, if anybody other than yourself, Bill Britton, Bob Deaton, John Smith, John Abner, James Hargis, Elbert Hargis and Ed Callahan knew of the plot to kill Cockrell, or had any hand in it?

Ques. 8—Tell what he had to do with it.

Ans.—He knew all about them being there, and he helped them to take beer, whisky and stuff, and he helped guard the Courthouse after the killing; he was stationed at Hargis' store.

Ques. 9—Had you and he ever talked on the subject?

Ans.—Oh, yes; that day; but I don't remember of talking to him about it before that.

Ques. 10—Did he know what was going to be done?

Ans.—Yes; he said, "Them men will fix him."

Ques. 11—How did Hargis bring the matter up with you after the shooting at the hotel?

Ans.—Well, after the shooting I came on up town with a whole crowd, and he called me back in the store and said Tom and Jim Cockrell had tried

PRIMARY CALLED FOR NOVEMBER

Will Select Nominees For State Offices.

Also To Choose Senatorial Candidate.

Democratic Committee Issues Order.

MEMBERS AGREE QUICKLY.

The Democratic State Executive Committee decided yesterday that a primary election should be held November 6, which is the same date of the general election, for the nomination of candidates for State offices to be voted for in 1907 and for the nomination of a candidate for United States Senator to be elected by the Legislature in 1908. It was announced that there was not a dissenting vote on the question, although after the adjournment of the committee R. B. Bradley, committeeman from the Second district, said that he voted neither way on the proposition, which was before the committee in the shape of a resolution.

A subcommittee was appointed for the purpose of arranging all matters of detail in connection with the holding of the primary under the State law, such as posting the notices required by law, the appointment of officers of election, printing of ballots, securing suitable rooms in the various voting precincts to hold the election and attending to various other matters. The subcommittee will distribute the ballots and determine the cost of the primary and apportion the same among the various candidates. The subcommittee shall make a full report to the State Executive Committee not later than August 1, 1906. The subcommittee consists as follows: Lewis McQuown, chairman; Mott Ayres, First district; G. W. Roark, Third district; A. B. Rouse, Sixth district; J. Norton Fitch, Eighth district; Finley Fogg, Tenth district.

Who May Enter Race.

The call states that any known Democrat shall have the right to become a candidate for nomination for the office of his choice upon paying the assessment made against him by the committee and pledging himself to support the nominees of said primary. The call also stipulates that all known Democrats of lawful age or who shall be a legal voter at the November election, 1907, shall be entitled to vote.

The meeting of the committee was uneventful as was anticipated. In fact, it had been known for some time that the calling of a primary, both for the nomination of candidates for State offices and for the nomination of a United States Senator to succeed Senator James B. McCreary, was a foregone conclusion. The committee was in session only a little over an hour—in fact, just long enough ostensibly to draw up the call as adopted. Although there was an array of candidates on hand, yet none of them saw fit to accept the invitation to appear before the committee and make known their desires in the matter of fixing the date and manner of making nominations.

* * *

Only One Absentee.

The time of the meeting was for 2 o'clock, but it was 2:20 o'clock in the afternoon when Chairman Lewis McQuown rapped for order in the big reading room of the Old Inn. A call of the committee by Secretary Percy Haly showed the following present:

Chairman State Executive Committee—Lewis McQuown, of Bowling Green.

State-at-Large—Judge J .M. Lassing, of Boone county.

First District—Mott Ayres, of Fulton.

Second District—R. B. Bradley, of Madisonville.

No Candidate Offers Suggestion.

W. A. Young, of the Ninth district, was the only absentee, but his proxy was held by Chairman Lewis McQuown. Chairman McQuown stated the object of the meeting briefly and said that he was ready to entertain any motions that any member desired to offer. Mr. Fogg moved that all the prospective candidates for State offices be invited to appear before the committee and offer any suggestion they

RULES VIOLATED, SAYS M'CREARY

Primary Too Far In Advance of Election.

Says Democrats Will Ask Why It Was Done.

Senator Talks Regarding Committee's Action.

NOT SURPRISED AT RESULT.

"Democrats will ask whether the recent action of the majority of the Democratic State Executive Committee was for the benefit of the whole Democratic party of Kentucky or for the benefit of a few Democrats."

Senator James B. McCreary, who is an announced candidate to succeed himself in the United States Senate, at the election to be held in 1908, thus expressed his opinion of the action taken yesterday by the State Executive Committee in calling a primary to select a Democratic candidate for the United States Senate. Senator McCreary was in Louisville yesterday, having come from Washington to attend the exercises incident to Home Coming. He did not attend the meeting of the committee at the Old Inn.

Last night Senator McCreary said regarding the action of the committee:

"I was not at the meeting of the State Democratic Executive Committee held at the Old Inn, but I was not surprised by the action of the committee in ordering a primary election to nominate Democratic canddates for State offices and for United States Senator.

"It has been geenrally stated that a majority of the State Executive Committee is under the control of the organization, or as some persons call it, the machine, and that some of the members of the committee hold appointments under the present regime, and others are expecting appointments.

"The chairman of the committee, to justify the call for a Democratic primary to nominate a Democratic candidate for United States Senator, referred to one district convention and expressions through the press, but he did not refer to the law which authorized it.

* * *

Always Favors Fair Primary.

"I have always been in favor of primary elections fairly and legally held. When I was first a candidate for United States Senator the other candidates and myself agreed to a primary election to be held two months before the election of a United States Senator by the General Assembly, but the State Democratic Committee did not deem it for the best interest of the Democratic party, and refused to order a primary election.

"I believe a large majority of the Democrats of Kentucky are in favor of giving me another term as United States Senator, and I am a candidate for United States Senator under the plan recently announced by the State Executive Committee.

"It is well known that I have always been a faithful, loyal Democrat, and that I have worked and made speeches in every campaign in our State for thirty years, and I have always, when in office, given all of my time to the faithful discharge of my duties, and when our State had been Republican for several years, and I was requested by the Democratic authorities to take charge of the campaign in 1900, I managed the campaign, visited many counties in the State, and organized and made speeches, and with the aid of my brother Democrats we redeemed the State from Republican rule and gave a majority to our candidate for Governor and our candidate for President.

"For a number of years, Democratic United States Senators have generally been given two terms in Kentucky, and as Democrats have not objected to or criticised my record, I believe no exception will be made in my case.

Benefit of Discussion.

"For many years conventions or primaries in Kentucky to nominate a State Democratic ticket have been held in May or June of the year in which the election was to occur, and it has been believed heretofore that State primaries should not occur when the Presidential or Congressional elections are held, so that national and State issues would be separated. There should always be the fullest discussion of State issues, and the fullest discussion of national issues. True Democratic principles and proper Democratic conduct will always be benefited by discussion. The people who assert their power when the time comes to vote were never more at the front than they are at present, as they have shown in recent State elections.

"Democrats will ask why was the primary election to nominate Democratic candidates for the State offices and for United States Senator ordered to be held on the regular election day in

JOYOUS CONCOURSE OF HOME COMERS TAKE CITY

Twelve Thousand Native Sons Here For the Opening Exercises.

Addresses of Welcome Will Be Delivered This Morning.

Magnificent Floral Parade to Be Given This Afternoon.

STATIONS THRONGED WITH VISITORS DAY AND NIGHT.

THOUSANDS MORE WILL ARRIVE ON TO-DAY'S TRAINS.

From East, from West, from North, from South, every incoming train yesterday brought to Louisville hundreds of home and heart-hungry Kentuckians, most of them tired, but all of them happy. Fully 12,000 prodigal sons and daughters of the old Commonwealth, many of them almost strangers to their kith and kin at home, pulled the hanging latch string yesterday and entered the open arms of the mother State.

The streets of the city, a blaze of light and color, were full of unfamiliar faces, but one who ventured forth could safely trust that all were friends and that all were fellow-Kentuckians.

To anyone who witnessed the crowds that packed the station platforms all the afternoon and evening yesterday and waited patiently, some of them for hours, to greet with great affection the returning wanderers, the love of Kentucky for her children and the love of Kentuckians for their kin was truly evident.

The trains entering the city through the day brought as many as those that entered after dusk, but when it had become nearly dusk, train after train entered the sheds at Tenth-street Station and at Seventh-street station so fast that even the trainmen themselves were bewildered.

* * *

All Hasten To Armory.

Immediately after the trains had stopped the occupants stepped out in throngs and crowded the passageways and the platforms of the trainsheds to their full capacity. In accordance with the instructions which had been posted, everybody hurried from the stations in the direction of the Armory, where, however, no more than 1,000 had registered in the various county headquarters when work was suspended for the night.

To-day begins Home Coming proper. Hundreds and thousands more, it was predicted last night, are yet on their way, and every train that rolls into the city will add large numbers to the hosts that already have arrived. Railroad men from St. Louis said last night that the great Union Station in that city was given over almost entirely to returning Kentuckians, and that trains could not be made up and headed for Louisville fast enough to carry away those that were brought in by the western railroads.

* * *

Welcome This Morning.

This morning Home-coming Kentuckians will be made formally welcome by the exercises in the Armory, at which Gov. Beckham will preside and at which Henry Watterson will deliver the address of welcome. Chairs for 12,000 persons, scarcely enough to accommodate those who arrived yesterday, are ready. The speakers will be sought out by the Kentucky Colonels, who will assemble at the Armory at 9:30 o'clock this morning for that purpose.

After the welcoming exercises the floral parade will be the feature of the day, the climax of which will be the crowning of the Queen at Central Park at the conclusion of the parade.

15,000 Are Here.

Beyond a doubt, 15,000 returned Kentuckians were guests of Louisville at 10 o'clock last night. No less than 12,000 entered the city by the trains that arrived at the Seventh and Tenth-street stations. Besides that, many of the passengers, somewhat familiar with the city, took advantage of their opportunities to escape the crush at the stations and got off the trains at the substations outside or at the crossings on Fourth avenue, where a great many of the trains stopped.

The estimate of 12,000 as the number of Home Comers who arrived in the city yesterday up to midnight is based on an accurate count of the number of coaches in the various trains, plus estimates of the number who arrived in the city in other ways and those who got off the cars before the stations were reached.

226 Coaches Arrive.

All told, 226 coaches, exclusive of baggage cars and mail cars, were drawn into the train sheds at the two stations. Allowing forty-five persons to the coach, which will be regarded as moderate when the tremendous loads carried by most of the trains is considered, 11,170 persons left the trains at the stations. The remainder of the 12,000 surely reached the city by midnight, and there were surely 3,000 strangers in town at midnight Monday.

JOYOUS MEETINGS.

Union Station Thronged All Day With Home Comers and Persons Waiting Arrival of Trains.

Union station at Tenth street and Broadway was filled with Home Comers yesterday. Trains arrived at intervals of five, ten and twenty minutes. As fast as one special steamed into the station, unloaded and backed out, another special train took its place. There was one continuous stream of people from the train shed to the curbing in front of the station on Broadway. Added to the constant stream of arrivals were those who had gone to the station to meet friends and relatives. Special officers were kept busy keeping the crowd on the move in order

GOVERNOR HOPES HOME COMERS WILL REMAIN.

Gov. Beckham last night said:

"I am much gratified to see such a large number of ex-Kentuckians come back to us for this occasion, and I hope that their love for the old State will be revived to such an extent that they will stay with us for all time.

"The loyalty and devotion which the former residents of the State exhibit by their return now shows how deeply rooted is the sentiment of Home and Home Coming. We, as Kentuckians, should be proud of the love these ex-Kentuckians are displaying for their native land, and it should brighten the fires of our own patriotism and love of the land of our birth."

PROGRAMME FOR TO-DAY.

(Reception and Welcome Day.)

11 o'clock a. m.—General welcoming exercises in the main drill hall of the new Armory at Sixth and Walnut streets. Hon. J. C. W. Beckham, Governor of Kentucky, presides. Addresses of welcome by Mr. Henry Watterson, editor of the Courier-Journal, and Hon. Paul C. Barth, Mayor of Louisville. Response by Hon. David R. Francis, of St. Louis. Decoration, with handsome medal, of Miss Louise Lee Hardin, of Denver, Col., who suggested "Home-coming Week."

1 p. m.—General handshaking at headquarters of each of the one hundred and nineteen counties, under balcony of main drill hall, Jefferson County Headquarters, west side of lobby.

3 p. m.—Handsome Floral parade. Nine Divisions—three to be devoted to automobiles, one to queen's float and maids of honor in victorias; one to one-horse traps and tandems; one to tallyhos and four-in-hands; one to pony carts; one to school floats, and one to the Fire Department, the last named showing modern fire-fighting apparatus alongside of the old engines and hose reels of days "before the war."

Route of Parade: Form at Eighth and Main streets. Eighth and Main to Brook street; Brook to Market; Market to Jackson; Jackson to Broadway; Broadway to First; First to Market; Market to Seventh; Seventh to Jefferson; Jefferson to Third (via Reviewing Stand); Third to Hill; Hill to Fifth; Fifth to St. James Court; St. James Court to Central Park.

8 p. m.—Concert by Philharmonic Orchestra and Musical Club at Armory.

MR. BRONSTON SEEKS TO RECOVER MONEY

SAYS BROKER DID NOT SELL WHEN ORDERED.

SECURES ORDER OF COURT.

Lexington, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Another sensation was sprung in financial circles here to-day when upon an order of general attachment based upon a suit filed by Charles J. Bronston, all the banking institutions in the city were summoned to show what funds they have on hand belonging to any or all of the three defendants subject to attachments for debt.

The defendants in the case are Morehead & Co., brokers, of Cincinnati; the Lexington Board of Trade, composed of A. G. Morgan, J. H. Patteson and W. T. Browning, and the Lexington Banking and Trust Company. The suit is to recover the sum of $29,150, which the plaintiff alleges he lost in stock speculations by reason of alleged fraudulent collusion and secret combination between all of the defendants against his interests and without his knowledge. Bond in attachment was given for $60,000 with the Fidelity Guaranty Company as surety, and the attaching order was placed in the hands of the Sheriff.

The plaintiff alleges that between April 4 and May 2 of this year, at the instance of the defendant, A. G. Morgan, he invested the sum of money now sought to be recovered, with $825 additional, as expenses, in alleged wagering transactions based upon a margin covering the rise and fall in the market value of stocks and commodities. In support of the allegation of fraud and collusion, the plaintiff asserts that had the defendant, A. G. Morgan, sold the stocks wagered upon when instructed to do so by the plaintiff at a time when there was a rise of three cents in the market value thereof, he would have made a profit of $18,000, but on the contrary, he asserts, all the defendants conspired to defraud him and did defraud him by refusing to sell said stock, holding it until the market declined one cent, then demanding more money from him to cover the losses, which was paid.

The plaintiff also states that when he dealt with A. G. Morgan he believed Morgan to be representing him, but that Morgan actually represented the other defendants. A warning order was issued against Morehead & Co., being a foreign corporation, requiring it to make answer within sixty days, and W. L. Sudduth was named as corresponding attorney. By a strange coincidence Attorney John T. Shelby, representing Morehead & Co., filed suit in the Federal Court to-day against the Lexington Banking and Trust Company, covering the same issues involved in the above suit, to require the bank to honor its check for $12,100. This suit was originally filed in the Circuit Court here, but was dismissed Monday on motion of the plaintiff.

No. 164. Not Good After June 20, 1906.

Tour to Europe Ballot.

This Ballot Will Count One (1) Vote

For .....

Dist. No..... Address.....

County .....State.....

When fully filled out and received at Courier-Journal office, by mail or otherwise, on or before expiration date shown above. Not good after that date. Void if name voted for has not been properly nominated. No ballot will be altered in any way, or transferred, after received by the Courier-Journal.

UNLESS THIS BALLOT IS TRIMMED CAREFULLY AROUND THE BLACK LINES, IT WILL NOT BE COUNTED.

FINAL INSTRUCTIONS ON TOUR TO EUROPE SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The last special ballot will be issued on subscription orders received by or before noon, Saturday, June 23.

The last single ballot will be printed in the Courier-Journal of Saturday, June 23.

No ballot will be received to be counted under any circumstances after Monday, July 2, at 12 o'clock noon.

The standing of candidates will be printed in the Courier-Journal of Sunday, June 24, for the last time, until the final result is announced in the paper Tuesday, July 3. Any candidate may come or send a representative to the Courier-Journal office to look over her own ballots between June 25 and July 2.

Contestants and their friends and all Courier-Journal agents are urged to use the regular Tour subscription blanks, and to fill these blanks out carefully and fully. The Courier-Journal will not be responsible for errors in orders, and will not undertake to correct such errors in the last days of the contest.

Special ballots will not be issued under any circumstances unless the full subscription price is sent with the original subscription order. See subscription rates in Tour News.

No person will be permitted to subscribe for more than one paper, to go to the same address, and no ballots will be issued on that portion of a subscription that may extend beyond December 31, 1907.

The successful Tourists will leave Louisville Thursday, July 12; sail from New York on steamship Columbia at noon, Saturday, July 14. Return to New York August 27; return to Louisville, Wednesday, August 29.

BATTLE OF BALLOTS

Just ten days more and the Courier-Journal's Tour to Europe Popularity Contest will end, so far as issuing ballots goes. All contestants are urged to put in their best licks in the remaining short time. In a few districts the race may possibly be said to be finished, but in others where even the leaders have a big start there may be surprises. Get all the orders you can, and rush them in as fast as you get them. Please do not hold back orders until the last minute, and then bring them in in a rush. The Courier-Journal has made every preparation to handle orders and issue ballots on them as rapidly as received, but the work is necessarily slow and tedious, on account of the care required, so help us out by sending orders the day received.

The last order on which a ballot will be issued must be in the Courier-Journal office by 12 o'clock noon June 23. This does not mean the order can be in the mail at that time, but just what is said—the order must be in this office, or no ballots will be issued. Railroad wrecks or delayed trains will not be taken into consideration. Postmarks will not count.

The last single ballot will be published in the Courier-Journal Saturday morning, June 23. This last ballot, and all special ballots dated to expire July 1, must be in the Courier-Journal office by or before noon Monday, July 2, or they will not be counted. The rule in regard to delayed orders will also apply to ballots. Candidates who think they will have an advantage in holding out ballots until the last hour may do so, but the Courier-Journal hopes that all ballots be turned in as soon as possible, to relieve the rush at the last minute. There will be little time for preparation on the part of successful contestants between July 3 and the starting date, July 12, so it will be best for all if the result can be known as early as June 23.

* * *

The vote this morning is a fair one, although few big ballots are counted. In District No. 12, Miss Bessie Cox votes 2,508, passing Miss Mattie L. Christian. Miss Mattie Hughes adds 1,055 in the Sixteenth and Miss Agnes Mount adds 1,000 in the Fifteenth.

* * *

Miss Alice Kohler, of District No. 6, asks the Courier-Journal to state that she has not withdrawn from the contest, nor will she withdraw at any time. A rumor that she had withdrawn or would withdraw has in some unaccountable manner gained currency.

LOBBY OF OLD INN CROWDED TO ITS CAPACITY.

CAUSES GENERAL SURPRISE.

The meeting of the Democratic State Executive Committee yesterday brought a swarm of politicians and prospective candidates from out in the State. Shortly after the early morning trains had arrived the lobby of The Old Inn was in a jam. It was a hearty handshake all around, and then the candidates began to urge their claims with each other.

Percy Haly, secretary of the State Central and State Executive Committees, had arrived the day previous and opened headquarters on the second floor. This was the Mecca of many of the politicians. The first question that most of the politicians from out in the State would ask on their arrival was whether or not Gov. Beckham would attend the meeting of the committee. By 10 o'clock it was generally known that the Governor had no intention of coming to Louisville until night. Senator James B. McCreary and Congressman Ollie James arrived in the city yesterday morning, but went to The Seelbach, and never appeared at The Old Inn during the day.

Chinn For Secretary of State.

A little sensation was created yesterday, when Morgan Chinn, Clerk of the Court of Appeals, announced that he was a candidate for Secretary of State. It had been understood that he was a proepective candidate for State Auditor. Mr. Chinn would not state why he determined at the last moment to announce for Secretary of State. Among the announced candidates for State offices in the city yesterday were:

Announced Candidates Present.

For Governor—S. W. Hager.

For State Auditor—H. V. McChesney and Henry B. Hines.

For State Treasurer—Scott Cook, of Graves county; Ruby Laffoon, of Hopkins county, and June W. Gayle, of Owen county.

For Secretary of State—Hubert Vreeland, of Jefferson county; J. Morgan Chinn, of Mercer county.

For Clerk of the Court of Appeals—Claud Desha, of Harrison county, and James E. Stone, of Louisville.

For Railroad Commissioner, First District—McD. Ferguson.

Many Politicians Attend.

Lieut. Gov. William P. Thorne was a conspicuous figure in the lobby of the hotel during the day. Among other well-known politicians who were in attendance at the meeting were: Senator Conn Linn, of Calloway county; Judge Joe Robbins, Clem Whittemore and Gus Thomas, of Mayfield; Senator J. W. Cammack, of Owen county; Jack Chinn, of Mercer county; W. P. Swope, of Owen county, candidate for Congress in the Seventh district; Ell H. Brown, State Prison Commissioner, of Frankfort; Harvey McCutcheon, State Prison Commissioner, of Russellville; Thomas A. Catlett, of Caldwell county; Charles McDowell and Robert Evans, of Boyle county; Rid Reed, of Livingston county; B. W. Bradburn, of Bowling Green; Judge John W. Hughes, of Harrodsburg, candidate for Congress in the Eighth district; R. W. Miller, of Richmond, candidate for Congress in the Eighth district; Gus W. Richardson, of Meade county; Mayor Thomas Combs and Representative W. F. Kline, of Lexington.

* * *

Local Leaders In Crowd.

Among the Louisville politicians who were mingling with the State politicians were: Former Mayor Charles F. Grainger, Mayor Paul C. Barth, James R. Smith, chairman of the Board of Public Safety; Senator Laban Phelps, Col. William B. Haldeman and John W. Vreeland.

A feature of the gathering yesterday was the luncheon given the members of the State Executive Committee at the Old Inn by John W. Vreeland, State Central Committeeman, and Biscoe Hindman, State Executive Committeeman. This was a splendid spread and was greatly enjoyed by the guests.

DUPONT ELECTED WITH MANY VOTES TO SPARE.

"Gas" Addicks Finally Forced To Surrender, One Ballot Being Enough.

Dover, Del., June 12.—The Delaware Legislature to-day elected Col. Henry A. Dupont United States Senator for the constitutional term beginning March 3, 1905. His election was practically unanimous, as the Democratic members voted blanks and all the Republican members save one voted for Col. Dupont. The exception was State Senator Thos. C. Moore, of Kent county, who voted for J. Edward Addicks.

The ballot resulted:

Senator Dupont 8, Addicks 1, blanks 5.

House—Dupont 20, blanks 8. Total, Dupont 28, Addicks 1, blanks 13. Total 42; necessary to a choice, 22.

The election of Col. Dupont will be formally declared at the joint session to be held to-morrow.

Col. Dupont is sixty-eight years of age and is a native of Delaware. He is the head of the great powder works bearing his name and is very wealthy. He served throughout the war of the rebellion and was awarded a congressional medal of honor for "most distinguished gallantry in action."

might choose in the matter of selecting the time and manner of nominating candidates. It was soon ascertained that none of the candidates were desirous of making any suggestions as to what the committee should do.

Judge J. M. Lassing immediately moved that the committee go into executive session. Mr. Rouse suggested that all members of the State Central Committee present be allowed to remain in the meeting. This suggestion was accepted and the committee immediately went into session behind closed doors. W. J. Semonin, Clerk of Jefferson county, was summoned and administered the oath to the members of the committee, as required by law.

Resolution For Primary.

Committeeman W. A. Lee, of the Seventh district, offered the following resolution, which was seconded by Committeeman Biscoe Hindman, of the Fifth district, and which was adopted without discussion or apparently without a dissenting vote:

Whereas, The Democrats of Kentucky will soon be called upon to nominate their candidates for the various State offices, to be filled at the regular election in November, 1907, and this committee must determine the time when and the plan by which they are to be selected; and,

Whereas, There seems to be an almost universal demand that the nominations for these offices be made by a primary election, in which the opportunity will be given each Democratic voter to express his choice and select his candidate for the several offices to be filled; and thereby the absolute will and wish of the party secured, and the vote of the humblest Democrats in the ranks made as potential in selecting the candidates as that of the most influential citizen; and,

Whereas, There is a growing sentiment the country over in favor of selecting United States Senators by popular vote, and the Legislature of Kentucky having repeatedly called upon the National Congress to so amend the Constitution as to permit Senators to be selected in this way, thus clearly demonstrating that this plan is favored by Kentuckians; and,

Whereas, The Democratic party in several of our sister States has selected its nominees in this way, and the plan, wherever tried, having met with general favor and given entire satisfaction, it is now the sense of this committee that the Democratic party of Kentucky be given an opportunity to say for whom they wish their Legislators to vote for United States Senator, and this opportunity should be given them before their Legislators are nominated and elected. The Legislators who are elected at the November election, 1907, will be called upon to elect a United States Senator who will take his seat March 4, 1909; therefore, be it

Resolved, That a primary election be held in the various voting precincts under the general primary election law throughout Kentucky on Tuesday, the 6th day of November, 1906, between the hours of 6 a. m. and 4 p. m., Standard time, for the purpose of nominating a Democratic candidate for United States Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1909, and also for the various State offices to be filled at the regular election in November, 1907.

* * *

To Arrange All Details.

The following resolution was immediately adopted, which was offered by Judge J. M. Lassing:

Be it further resolved that for the purpose of arranging in detail all matters pertaining to the conduct of said primary election under the State laws, such as posting the notices required by law, the appointment of officers of election, printing of ballots, securing suitable rooms in which to hold the election, distributing the ballots and boxes, determining the cost of holding the primary and apportioning same among the various candidates for the several offices, appointment of challengers and inspectors for the candidates as required by law, and the doing of all acts and things necessary to the end that the party may have a full and fair expression of its choice among the candidates for the various offices, and that a fair, honest and economical primary election may be held, a subcommittee, consisting of the chairman of this committee, Hon. Louis McQuown, and five other members of this committee, to-wit: A. B. Rouse, Mott Ayres, G. W. Roark, Norton Fitch and Finley Fogg is hereby appointed to carry out this resolution and to ascertain all things necessary to carry out this resolution and make full report to this committee not later than August 1, 1906. For such a time as this committee may desire to take.

Be it further resolved that in said primary any known Democrat shall have the right to become a candidate for nomination for the office of his choice upon his paying the assessment made against him by the committee and pledging himself to support the nominees of the said primary. That at said primary the candidate receiving the highest number of votes for the office for which he is a candidate shall be declared the party nominee for that office, and in case of a tie vote, it shall be decided as the law directs. That at said primary all known Democrats of lawful age or who shall be a legal voter at the November election, 1907, shall be entitled to vote.

The committee adjourned at 3:45 o'clock.

JEFFERSON COUNTY WOMAN DIES WHILE VISITING.

Mrs. Maggie Talley, whose home was near Riverview, Jefferson county, Ky., was found dead in bed at the home of her father, Samuel Huston, who lives two miles from Jeffersonville on Dr. Julia Ingram's farm, Monday evening, by her two little sons. Mrs. Talley, who was the wife of John Talley, went to her father's home a week ago on a visit and was apparently in good health, although she had complained at times of heart trouble. She seemed to be enjoying the visit, but on Monday complained of feeling badly.

Coroner Coots was summoned and pronounced death due to heart trouble.

HALL TASTEFULLY DECORATED

(By ROBERT E. HUGHES, Director General.)

Ten months of preparation for five days of festivity find their compensation on the eve of Kentucky's much - heralded "Home Coming," in the knowledge that the work has not been in vain—a throng of nativity-loving sons and daughters unequaled in the history of Louisville; a programme of entertainment and amusement never before approached, and weather that makes every summer resort of the United States green with envy.

The railroads tell us they are pouring a mass of humanity through the city's gates, and the crowded streets substantiate their statements. Every visitor is meeting a welcome hearty and cordial from citizens of their counties who have not left Kentucky, and they are finding the metropolis of their mother State a city of progress and enterprise that is opening their unfamiliar eyes.

Suffice it to say, we are all happy over prospects, and hope many of those who have come home will stay with us.

Home Coming!

With all the sweet sacredness with which these words are fraught; with old memories revived and thoughts reverting to the childhood scenes and friendships; with a spirit of gladness, and yet withal, a sadness at the absence of faces that death has hidden, hundreds and thousands of Kentucky's wandering sons and daughters returned to the fold yesterday, and right heartily were they welcomed.

More touching than the mute suffering of a wounded warrior; more heartfelt than the thanks of he who was ministered to by the Good Samaritan; happier and tenderer than the loving embrace of a mother for her errant boy and more fervent than words can describe were the reunions and meetings that took place yesterday and last night at the Armory.

* * *

Old Friends Clasp Hands.

From early morning until late last night the scene was repeated and repeated again. Tears streamed from the eyes of many grizzled and wrinkled faces, merely for the joy of coming home again. Friends who had not met in kindly concourse in years stumbled unexpectedly upon each other and throughout the immense place stood little knots and groups, rehearsing the joyous times of early life in the grand old State or indulging in reminiscences of those whose names had been recalled to mind by the stories of youth.

Age-bent and gray-haired granddams and great-granddams felt themselves uncontrollably drawn to the common meeting point and they, too, were turned to a reminiscent mood and stories of the olden days were retold with a relish and gusto that the ravages of ruthless time could not diminish in interest. Once again was happiness complete for young and old and the affecting scenes encountered on every side were without number.

The great iron gates at the Walnut street entrance of the Armory, the headquarters for all of the many and varied attractions of the week and the place designated for all the glad reunions that took place, were drawn back at 12:41 o'clock yesterday afternoon and the throng that for days has waited for a sight of the gorgeously decorated interior surged inside.

It was a fitting and magnificent spectacle that greeted the Home Comers; the spacious drill hall resplendent with flags, flowers, bunting, paintings of Kentucky's famous sons and subdued glow of a perfect June sun beaming through the windows high above—all combined made a picture typical of the manhood, womanhood and childhood represented within the grim, gray walls of the sheltering structure.

* * *

Success Crowns Labors.

Not less satisfying to the immense concourse of people for whom the long months of preparation had been devoted and energy expended was the feeling of pleasure and sense of duty well done that thrilled the hearts of those who have performed the patriotic task. When the appointed time came the various committees properly felt that all was ready and that no detail had been left unattended. Louisville had done herself proud and that pride was not flaunted in the faces of those who had profited by the efforts put forth to make their visit pleasant and memorable.

It was not necessary to send forth by word of mouth the welcome that Louisville extends—it was in the air and it pervaded every nook and cranny not only of the Armory where the pilgrims wandered, but throughout the city—and now that these returned Kentuckians are once more within the borders of their native State they know instinctively that they are a part of a gathering at once unique, immense, brotherly and soul-satisfying. It is a time for happiness and joyousness and all of the loyal sojourners know that the city is theirs. It is to be a week of unalloyed pleasure and the ball has been started rolling under the most auspicious circumstances.

AT THE ARMORY.

Busy Scenes About the Registration Booths In Big Hall.

From the moment the big iron gates at the armory swung inward yesterday shortly after noon, Kentuckians by birth from almost every State in the Union and from several points without the borders of the United States pushed and jammed their way through the broad entrance to the spacious drill hall.

Beneath the overhanging balconies and extending around the hall were booths for the 119 counties of the State. In each booth was a table for the registration of the pilgrims and only a few minutes elapsed until the names of those who for years have been away from the native heath were inscribed in the registration books in the charge of a commissioner for each county.

While the work necessarily proceeded slowly, during the afternoon hundreds of names were written and interesting data given. Of the 119 counties in the State the commissioners of fifty-one failed to report to begin the work of registration yesterday afternoon. All will be on hand to-day, and from every indication the attendants at the booths will be kept busy until a late hour at night. Up to the time the registration closed at 9 o'clock last night there had been a total of 908 names placed on the books.

* * *

Old Friends Meet.

Owing to the excellent method devised by the Committee on Registration for the easy location of the various counties, there was little or no confusion, and the Home-comers could tell at a glance at the cards bearing the names of the counties and hung conspicuously beneath the balconies, where they should go to register. Each county booth became a meeting place for friends, and in many instances old-time companions who had not met for years, and who felt that difficulty might be experienced in recognition, had written to each other across the continent, appointing the county headquarters as the place for meeting and renewing the acquaintance broken off years before by removal from the native bailiwick.

To a man the "county commissioners," the men in charge of the county registration books, were "good fellows," and each showed that he had made a careful study of the "old-timers" who might be expected to return to old Kentucky. The books were cared for in a systematic manner and when all of the names shall have been taken, data and information that will be of inestimable value will be at hand.

While only a small fraction of the Home-comers was enabled to register yesterday, a fair proportion of those who arrived early visited the booths, and to-day will see thousands of names added. The bulk of the visitors came in last night too late to register, and this feature of the week will be one of the most important to-day. It is hoped by the Executive Committee that no Home-comer will fail to register at some time during the week.

It is a fact of which Louisville cannot be proud that repeated attempts were made yesterday by residents of this city to have their names inscribed on the Jefferson county registration book for the sole purpose of obtaining the courtesies that are meant only for the bona fide Home Comers.

When finally it was detected that the fraud was being perpetrated the Jefferson County Committee promptly issued orders to the clerks that every person registering must show his railroad ticket or be identified positively as a returned Kentuckian. Even after this order was sent out, it was reported by the clerks that several Louisville persons had gone among their acquaintances in the ranks of the real Home Comers and borrowed their railway tickets in order to obtain the badges.

It was also announced yesterday that the Jefferson county headquarters will be kept open each night until 9 o'clock in order that everyone may have an opportunity to register. Up to the time of closing last night 496 returned Jefferson county natives, including those Louisville persons who had fraudulently registered, were recorded on the books.

* * *

Everything Taken.

At the rooms of the Accommodations Committee at the Armory, it was said last night that every hotel room in Louisville is either occupied or reserved for Home Comers. The only accommodations now available are at private houses, lodging houses and the smaller hotels. Of this class of places the committee has an ample number and no fear is felt that any who arrive will have no place to stay.

It was also reported at the committee rooms that the bakeries of the city are almost up to the limit of their capacity and that all are importing large quantities of bread. All the hotels, anticipating the demands that would be made upon them, have laid in a large stock of all kinds of provisions and are in every way prepared to care for their guests.

The Information Committee, having under its direction the work of more than 100 boys and men who met all trains arriving in Louisville yesterday, was also overwhelmed with work. It was said last night that corps of High School boys and others employed had performed well the work allotted to them and that no person came within the gates of Louisville who was not cared for in the best possible manner.

To-day this committee will be reinforced by the addition of 160 Manual Training School boys and the vast crowds that are expected on all trains will be met and directed to their various quarters.

* * *

Firemen Ready.

Looking after the safety of the Armory are eight firemen and four patrolmen. The firemen were kept busy yesterday enforcing the order against smoking in the drill hall, and many a good, or tolerably good cigar, was thrown away at the command of one of the firemen.

The patrolmen were at the Army ostensibly to preserve order, but for all their services were needed they might as well have been out on the Pike, for not a mother's son of all the thousands of returned Kentuckians that wandered in and out of the big building did anything for which he could be "collared down."

Throughout the vast enclosure the visitors strolled, sat, talked and listened, and the spirit of the occasion fastened itself upon each in a manner that betokened only good will toward all men. Even late last night when the throng for the most part was tired out after a day's ride across the country or from walking about the city, there were still smiles on all faces.

One of the touching and affecting incidents of the day came at 10 o'clock when, with the drill hall lighted up and the thousands of incandescent lamps adding their brilliancy to the elaborate decorations, a band—one of the dozen or more that kept the air ringing all of yesterday—marched into the hall playing "My Old Kentucky Home."

Reverently the throng, that for a moment before had been laughing and chatting, stilled itself and made an aisle for the musicians to reach the stage. Hats were doffed, heads were bowed and tears streamed down many cheeks as the sweet strains of the State's grandest song floated and reverberated throughout the vast structure. Then the musicians changed quickly to "Dixie," and instantly a great cheer went up from the crowd. The lively air was lost in the voume of sound that went out from hundreds of throats and it was not until the band was seated high up on the platform in the rear that the applause subsided. It was a patriotic and sensational outburst that came without premeditation and was a pretty tribute to the tender emotion of the Kentuckians, whether they came from afar after many years' absence or were Louisville residents whose intimate acquaintance with the beloved State had never been broken.

* * *

"I Can't Come Home."

Another incident that was affecting, came yesterday when J. E. Dorland, chairman of the Hotels and Accommodations Committee, received a letter, unsigned, evidently written by an aged woman, and dated Paris, Tex. In part the letter read:

"No, I can't come home. Here we have taxes and insurance. I never heard of such things in Kentucky. Beside, all who would care to see me are sleeping underneath the bluegrass and the clover. * * * My grandfather was the first Treasurer of the State of Kentucky. He must have been an honest man, for he did not leave me enough to go home, so I must only wander in spirit with the spooks of other days and see the dear faces and listen to the beautiful strains of 'My Old Kentucky Home.'"

After Mr. Dorland had read the letter he passed it on to several other men in the room, and the evident earnestness of the writer, who could not swallow her pride enough to give her ment she had so beautifully expressed, name, together with the tender sentiment she had so beautifully expressed, caused tears of patriotic emotion to rush to the eyes of those who perused the epistle.

Another surprise was given the Foster Day Committee yesterday, when word was received that the young women of the Girls' High School intend to participate in the Foster day parade. This will add at least 500 young women to the procession, and Prof. Bartholomew wishes the pupils to understand that they are expected to assemble at Third avenue and Broadway at 1 o'clock on Thursday.

Below is a list, practically complete, showing the Home-comers who had registered before 9 o'clock last night, together with their present home addresses and the county from which they originally hailed, as well as the commissioners and other officials of the various counties

COMING HOME IN OLD KENTUCKY, BY ROBERT BURNS WILSON

New Song By Kentuckian Who Longs For His Native State, But Cannot Come.

His heart touched by the sentiment pervading the entire land through the spirit of the Kentucky Home Coming, Robert Burns Wilson, who left his native heath seven years ago, has expressed his regret at not being able to return and mingle with his friends, in a bit of verse received yesterday by R. E. Hughes, Director General. Mr. Wilson was born in Frankfort, and several years ago went to New York, where he made a name for himself as an artist. In the letter that accompanied the poetry he concluded by saying:

Heartily regretting that I cannot be with you at the Home Coming, except in spirit, believe me, very sincerely yours, ROBERT BURNS WILSON.

The verses, entitled "Coming Home in Old Kentucky," are dedicated "To my only daughter, Elizabeth, this song of Home Coming in her native State is affectionately inscribed."

Home again in God's country, while the summer reeds are rune,
When the green wheat turns to gold and when the bluegrass blooms—in June;

Coming home—to breathe again the sweet and memory-laden air!
When the scent of new-cut clover calls the soul to fly from care.
When the waving elders beckon, when the shimmering lindens call,

Land, Oh, land of love and beauty! where the full heart grows oppressed
With its own wild-winged emotions overborne and overblessed;
'Tis the God's deep cup of vintage too divinely fine and rare,

Summer land of clouds and sunshine, bitter storms thy life has known,
But thy ruling spirit lives and never leaves her shining throne;
And around that glorious figure—fair in their undying youth—

Wooded hills or level plains, in Autumn's gold or Summer's green;
For the soul of every picture which our eager hearts recall

A conscious light, a sacred hush, falls over field and stream;
Each breeze that blows, each morning rose, each flower upon the stem,
Each clear brook and each jeweled blade speaks, first and last, of them.

Oh, to all Kentucky's children, be ye kind, ye heavens fair!
Bend protectingly above them in their home and everywhere;
May their courage never falter—may God's blessings never fail—

LAST VISIT AS PRISONER.

Capt. William Ditto In Louisville In 1863—Captured At Lexington.

Hale and hearty at the age of eighty years, and stepping with all the elasticity of youth, Capt. William L. Ditto set foot on Kentucky soil yesterday morning for the first time in forty-three years. His last visit to the State was in August, 1863, and his recollections of it are fraught with the visions of smoke and battle and the stirring incidents attendant upon the struggle between the North and South. At that time Capt. Ditto was marched through the streets of Louisville, a prisoner of war, with others, on their way to Johnson's Island, where he spent eighteen months in captivity.

Capt. Ditto is a native of Louisiana, and is a nephew of the late Judge Elijah F. Nuttall, of Henry county, Ky. At the outbreak of the Civil War he enlisted in the First Louisiana cavalry, under the command of Col. John S. Scott. The command was sent into Kentucky by order of Gen. Buckner, to create unfavorable sentiment against Gen. Morgan. Capt. Ditto, with a detachment of Gen. Burnside's command, were captured in a raid near Lexington, and marched to Johnson's Island.

Capt. Ditto has many friends in Louisville, and has taken a keen interest in the Home Coming preparations. Since the war he has been located at Ocala, Fla., where his four sons are engaged in the real estate business.

Diogenes searched for an honest man with a lighted lantern. If Diog. were here now, he would find all the honest men writing anti-graft articles for the magazines. Wintersmith's is an honest medicine. It cures malaria.

that the passage way from the train shed to the sidewalk might not become entirely blocked. Members of the Information bureaus were on hand at the station all day, and they were kept busy. There was little time for connected conversation in and about the station. There was one constantly shifting, jostling mass of humanity, all the visitors being anxious to get to a hotel or the home of friends or relatives.

Special trains began to arrive at Union station yesterday morning as early as 7 o'clock. Most of those who swarmed through the gates before noon were termed stragglers, few Kentucky societies arriving in bodies.

* * *

Crowd of Varied Classes.

Men and women of every degree in life brushed elbows in the immense crowd about the station. White-haired men and women, many of them over eighty years old, were carried along by the ever-shifting crowd. Anxious friends and relatives, residents of Louisville, searched vigilantly in the swirling mass of people for a glimpse of loved ones whose arrival they were expecting. Many affecting scenes were witnessed by the casual observer. Men and women who had not met in years grasped each other by the hand and almost forgot to loosen the grip of welcome.

"Howdy, Uncle Hiram!
Glad yer come terday;
Didn't bring yer kyarpit sack.
How long yer gwine ter stay?
De latchstring's hangin' loose
On de outside ob de do's;
Jes' take—don't ax fo' w'at yer want.
Dis heah ole town is yo's.
COL. WILL S. HAYS.

"Move on there; keep moving, please," was the constant admonition of those stationed about for that purpose. Despite the efforts of the special officers, the crowds often became congested to such an extent that it was almost impossible to move forward.

Wearing an automobile veil, tied jauntily under her chin, a sprightly Louisville girl, who had been buffeted by the crowd for more than half an hour, finally caught sight of her uncle and aunt in the press of people. When she finally reached their side, she doubled her small fist and beat her uncle frantically in the back.

"You dear, old thing!" she ejaculated, "how glad I am to see you!" Then turning to her aunt, she clasped her tightly about the waist and refused to let go until the press of people forced a separation. Laughing, gesticulating and talking all in one, she finally led the way to an automobile that was in waiting and the trio was whirled away.

* * *

Back After Half Century.

"I was born in Meade county, Ky., and left there, going with my parents to Eugene, Oregon, fifty-four years and three months ago," said R. H. Shacklett. "This is my first visit back to Kentucky, and I can't begin to describe the feeling of joy that swept over me when I knew I was whirled through the Bluegrass State again. I have spent the greater part of my life in Oregon, and it is a fine and thriving State, but, somehow, my boy, I'm always proud when I can tell a man I was born in old Kentucky. I'm sixty-eight years old now, and I was only fourteen years old when I left my native State. I learned my letters from studying the headlines of the old Louisville Journal. My father took the Louisville papers for years after we went to Oregon, and I tell you I've never lost track of the place of my nativity."

J. L. Darnavy and wife, both of whom are native Kentuckians, were waiting to board a train for Lexington. "I was born in Fayette county," said Mr. Darnavy, "and my wife is a native of Scott county. We left Lexington twenty-six years ago, and went to Columbia, Mo. This is our first visit back home, and we're mighty glad to be here. I'm seventy-five years old, and have been a farmer all my life. We just got in this morning, but don't expect to tarry in Louisville. We want to be with the folks we knew when we were growing up, and for that reason we're going to Lexington. They'll have a barbecue, where we can meet old friends and talk about changes that have taken place."

* * *

Away Eighty Years.

One of the oldest Home Comers is Robert Smith, of Columbia, Mo. He is eighty-six years old, and left Carlisle for Missouri when he was only six. Mr. Darnavy said yesterday that he and Robert Smith are neighbors. Mr. Smith was expected to arrive in Louisville from Missouri last night.

Col. Jerry B. Dorsey, of Columbia, Mo., is another native of Carlisle, Ky., who was expected to arrive last night. He is seventy-five years old, and has not visited his native county in years.

T. A. Riffe, a coal merchant of Bibb county, Ala., was filled with enthusiasm over the prospect of again seeing his father and mother, who live at Hopewell, Greenup county, Ky.

"Yes, sir; that's where I was born," he said, "and I haven't been back there for eleven years. During that time I haven't seen my old mother and father, and I just decided I wouldn't leave the station here until I boarded the train that will take me back home. I reached Louisville early this morning and im pretty much fatigued, but, somehow, I feel as though I will reach my destination sooner if I don't budge from this station until train time. Home coming is a mighty fine thing, and I'm grateful to the Kentucky girl who suggested it. I might not be here now had it not been for her. Somehow, ever since this Kentucky home coming has been agitated, I have been unable to resist an invisible voice that seemed to call to me to come home. This may the last opportunity I shall have to see my mother and father alive."

Just Couldn't Resist.

"I've been away forty-one years," he said, "and have built up a splendid practice in Camden. I am fond of the people there, and they have confidence in me, but I couldn't resist the invitation to come back to Kentucky for a few days. I am seventy-one years old and haven't visited my native State before in forty-one years. You wouldn't take me to be as old as I am, would you? I entered the Confederate Army when I was sixteen and was mustered out July 29, 1865. I was a member of the First battalion, Kentucky State troops, Bridgewater's command, Company A. I never realized until I was fairly on the way what a treat it was to visit my birth place. I intend to search out my old boyhood's haunts in Wayne county and look up some of the fellows I used to know there."

Seventy years old and a banker, J. C. Anderson, of Idaho Falls, Idaho, received an invitation to attend the Kentucky Home Coming and at once accepted. He is a native of Jessamine county, and left for that place yesterday afternoon. While waiting for his train yesterday morning he said he had been away from Kentucky forty years. He established a bank at Idaho Falls in the latter part of 1866. He has progressed in Idaho, but has not lost his love for Kentucky. He said he lived in Lexington for many years.

S. P. Gist, of Salem, Neb., is another banker who arrived at Union Station yesterday morning. He is a native of Monroe county, and left there in 1857. He is seventy-one years old and has prospered since leaving his native State. A longing which he could not resist impelled him to accept the Home-coming invitation.

* * *

Giant Comes Home.

Six feet four inches tall and wearing a long white beard, Adam Ring, a farmer of Boone county, Missouri, attracted considerable attention as he walked about, waiting for his train at Tenth and Broadway. He arrived in Louisville yesterday morning, and left a few hours later for Mason county, where he has relatives. He said it had been twenty years since he set foot on Kentucky soil. He is sixty-three years old.

Seventy-two years old and a native of Washington county, yesterday was the first time that James M. Charter set foot on Kentucky soil since he was three months old.

"I was born June 27, 1833," he said, "and went to Blandinsville, McDonough county, Ill., with my parents when I was three months old. This is my first visit back to my native State. I tell you I am proud to be a Kentuckian, and have never met a Kentuckian yet who did not feel the same about it as I do. I married Miss Eliza Hungate, whose father, William Hungate, was a Kentuckian. We were married August 26, 1853.

* * *

Regrets Children Not Kentuckians.

"We have seven children, and my only regret is that they are not Kentuckians. My parents were Jonathan and Nancy Ward Charter."

Mr. Charter brought with him to Kentucky indorsements from four of the leading bankers of Blandinsville, stamping him as a man of means and influence in the county. During his stay in Louisville he will be the guest of J. M. Bishop, of 2100 Von Borries avenue.

AT SEVENTH-STREET STATION.

Incoming Trains Crowded, But Passengers Were Happy.

Every train that rolled into the train shed of the Seventh-street station yesterday and last night, even the accommodation trains from towns out in the State, brought its quota of Home Comers. Extra coaches were found on almost every train, and persons who came in lost no time in getting off and out of the gates. The waiting room of the station as well as the platform, was thronged all day and most of the night by Louisville people, who had assembled to greet the wanderers returning.

A corps of the information boys from the Male High School stood ready to do anything in its power, collectively or individually, and frequent calls were made upon them for service. The First Regiment Band, arrived at the station at 1 o'clock, and made a whole lot of noise under the big roof. Seats on the benches in the waiting-room were kept well filled by friends waiting to meet incomers and home-comers waiting for trains to take them out to their old homes in the State.

* * *

Senator McCreary Arrives.

Among the arrivals of distinguished personages at the Seventh-street station yesterday morning, was Senator James Bennett McCreary, who was met by Mr. Bruce Haldeman and other members of the Reception Committee and escorted to his hotel. He came from Washington on a train over the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad.

The train was made up of six coaches, each of which was filled to its capacity, over 300 people leaving it at the station. Hundreds of those who reached the city yesterday had come early in the hopes that by so doing they might avoid the crowd. Their hopes were unfounded, however, for they were so numerous that they made crowd themselves.

Except for the special trains and special cars that came in yesterday afternoon and last night, the crowd that poured into the Seventh-street station was made up mostly of individual home-comers and a few family parties. No concerted attempt seems to have been made to arrange for parties from each county in other States, although the crowds were homogeneous and impromptu parties were arranged.

S. M. Logue, of Harrisonville, Mo., arrived at noon yesterday over the Baltimore and Ohio South-western railroad. His train from Kansas City to St. Louis was delayed three hours at Pleasant Hill, Mo., by a wreck. During the delay the Kentuckians got acquainted and when the trip was resumed, passed the time singing Kentucky songs and in exchanging stories of earlier days. No provision had been made by the travelers for sleep, and when night caught them, every seat in the cars was filled, the aisles were crowded with those sitting on suit cases and some had to stand.

* * *

Away Nineteen Years.

"I was born in Cecelia, Hardin county," said Mr. Logue, "and am going back there to-day for a day or so with old friends. I expect to be in Louisville the last two days of the week. It has been nineteen years since I saw the town and I expect it has grown some. On the trains, everybody, from what I could hear, was coming to Louisville. When we transferred, the men at the gates got so they asked, 'Louisville?' of everyone, and our conductor said he saw the name so often it hurt his eyes."

Among those at the station most of the day yesterday was S. L. Smallwood, of Hardin county. He was there, he said, to meet relatives from Oklahoma and Missouri.

"I expect," he said, "Henry H. Smallwood, of Texas county, Mo., and his three children, and William Smallwod and Dr. Pryor Smallwood, of Oklahoma. I know they will arrive at this station, but I don't know the train and I am going to wait here, if it takes the rest of the week, until they come. There doesn't anybody get through the gate without my seeing them. They said they would come and they will and I'll be here to meet them. We will spend the rest of the week in Louisville and then go home to Hardin county for a while."

H. H. Church, formerly of Shelby county, now a resident of Girard, Ill., headed a party of six. Mr. Church went to Illinois with his parents forty-nine years ago and has not been back since. Mrs. Church, who accompanies him, is a native of Illinois. In the party are Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Deck, James Sutherland and daughter, Mrs. R. Harris, all of Girard. Mrs. Deck was born in Shelby county and Mr. Sutherland in Anderson county. The party will visit Mrs. Marinda Satterwhite, of Shelbyville, for Home Coming in Shelby county.

J. H. Wilson, of Montrose, Mo., is a native of Virginia, but his father was a Kentuckian and settled in Maysville in 1803. His grandfather, Samuel Baily, was killed by the Indians at Maysville. Mr. Wilson will spend most of his time in Kentucky visiting relatives in Catlettsburg.

Judge W. H. H. Taylor, of Chrisney, Ind., arrived yesterday about noon on the accommodation from Evansville over the Southern railway. He left his birthplace in Bardstown over forty years ago and although just across the State has not been in the State since. He was met at the gate by J. H. Mulhall, also of Chrisney, who preceded him to the city. Mr. Mulhall was born in Elizabethtown, but lived in Grayson county until four years ago. Both expect to see what is "doing" in Louisville before they go to their former homes out in the State.

Edward Barbour, who lives in Washington county, Idaho, also arrived early in the afternoon. He is expecting to meet his brother, James Barbour, of Hart county, Ky., in Louisville. Mr. Barbour is seventy-five years of age and has been away from Kentucky fifty-six years. He is a veteran of the Union army and has attended many of the grand reunions, passing through Louisville four years ago on his way to the East. He and his brother, who is seventy-three years of age, expect to spend the week in Louisville, after which they will attend the Home Coming at Glasgow June 16. Mr. Barbour will stay in Kentucky as long as his ticket will let him. He is a native of Barren county.

November when Representatives in Congress are to be elected, and many months sooner than ever held before in Kentucky. This was never done before in Kentucky or in any other Southern State.

"They will ask why was a primary to nominate a Democratic candidate for United States Senator called eighteen months before the election of a United States Senator by the General Assembly, and two years and eight months before the Senator elected could take the oath of office? And they may remember that State primary elections have been held in the last few weeks in Tennessee and Arkansas to nominate State officers, including United States Senators, to be voted for next November.

* * *

Rules Violated.

"Democrats will also ask why the rule and law governing the Democratic party in the State of Kentucky, which was adopted by Democrats at the last State convention in 1904, has been violated, extract from Rule 11 being as follows:

Said State Executive Committee, or any other committee, shall not call a primary or convention for the nomination of a Democratic candidate or candidates for any office to be filled by a popular vote prior to the first day of November, in the year next preceding the year in which the election is to be held, for which said candidate is to be voted for.

"Democrats will ask whether the recent action of a majority of the Democratic State Executive Committee was for the benefit of the whole Democratic party of Kentucky or for the benefit of a few Democrats."

DREWRY IN RACE.

Will Be Candidate For Railroad Commissioner.

Thomas Drewry yesterday formally announced as a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Railroad Commissioner for the Second district, to succeed C. C. McChord, of Washington county. Mr. Drewry is a young man who has achieved considerable prominence as a member of the lower branch of the General Assembly. He has served six years from one of the Louisville districts. As a member of the Legislature Mr. Drewry has filled the chairmanship of many of the most important committees and has made a record that he can boast of.

While Mr. Drewry has been contemplating the race for Railroad Commissioner for some time, yet he never formally announced until he appeared before the Second District Committee yesterday. Mr. Drewry also made himself conspicuous yesterday by advocating a convention as the manner of nominating a candidate for Railroad Commissioner in the face of the fact that the primary craze is on. Mr. Drewry says, though, he intends to run the race through whether the committee decides on a primary or convention.

JAMES OR BLACKBURN

Will Announce For Governor In Next Few Days.

It is said on absolute authority that either Congressman Ollie James or Senator J. C. S. Blackburn will make the race for the Democratic nomination for Governor. The arrival of Congressman James yesterday from Washington strengthened the report that has been current for some time that he would probably enter the race for Governor. It is certain that both of the men will not make the race. It is expected that a conference will be held within the next two days at which some conclusion will be arrived at as to who will make the race. It may be stated that whichever of the two decides to make the race that he will make a thorough canvass of the State.

HAYS FOR GOVERNOR.

Announcement To Be Made In Next Day Or Two.

Frankfort, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The formal announcement of Attorney General N. B. Hays, of Bell county, for the governorship, to be voted for in the Democratic primary election in November next, may be expected within the next day or two. Mr. Hays has prepared his announcement and will give it out in Louisville, probably to-morrow.

William G. Baxter, of Louisville, a member of the late General Assembly from one of its districts, is a probable starter in the race for Clerk of the Court of Appeals. Mr. Baxter is at present the official copyist of the court, to which place he was appointed by Clerk J. Morgan Chinn.

W. P. KIMBALL TO RUN.

Announces His Plan To Seek Seventh District Nomination.

Lexington, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—W. P. Kimball, who is now at Martinsville, Ind., recuperating from an attack of inflammatory rheumatism, sent word home to-day that he would return by Saturday and would be prepared to begin an active campaign for the congressional nomination in the Seventh district in his own behalf. His friends here profess the belief that he will have almost clear sailing for the nomination.

BRACKEN'S COMMISSIONER AND ATTRACTIVE ASSOCIATES.

MRS. SEMMIE T. JACKSON, Of Augusta, Hostess.

J. A. McCANE, Of Brooksville, Commissioner.

ELABORATE PLANS FOR ELIZABETHTOWN RECEPTION.

Will Have Home-Coming Day For the County—Many Distinguished Men To Speak.

Elizabethtown, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The Hardin county Home Come, June 18-19, promises to be one of the most important events in the history of the county. About fifteen hundred Home Comers will be present and the attendance each day is expected to range between 1,200 and 1,500 people. Arrangements have been made to decorate the city in an elaborate manner with flags and bunting in honor of the Home Comers. A regular old-fashioned barbecue with roasted meats will be held on both days. The Daughters of the Confederacy will give a reception on the evening of June 19, which promises to be the greatest social event ever held in the city. George W. Jones, of Montgomery, Ala., a former resident of the county, will address the Home Comers, and arrangements are being made to obtain other distinguished speakers. Ex-Senator Lindsay will probably be present. Wehrley's Band, of Louisville, has been employed to discourse music for the Home Comers. All arrangements for the great event have been about completed.

JUDGE STOUT TO CALL SPECIAL TERM

For Powers Case After His Present Court Sitting Is Over.

Lexington, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Judge R. L. Stout, of the Scott Circuit Court, stated to-day that he would call a special term of that court for the purpose of disposing of the Powers case as soon as convenient after the close of the Bourbon Court, which he is now holding.

JETT TELLS HORRIBLE STORY OF DREATHITT COUNTY CRIMES

to kill him and said, "We will fix him up now."

Ques. 12—About how long did you and he discuss it at that time?

Ans.—I don't have no idea in the world.

Ques. 13.—Were the details arranged by you and him?

Ans.—He arranged them and I helped to carry them out; he told me two or three days before the killing that Smith and Abner were coming to help kill him. I don't know that I had ever seen Abner before; I had seen Smith. On Friday I asked Jim when them men was coming, and he said, "On Saturday night." On Saturday night Elbert Hargis and me was loafing around the store like men do, you know, and we kind of drew a crowd, and Jim Hargis told us to leave; that them men wouldn't come while there was anybody there. Then we went to bed and Hargis put out the lights in his store and slept there in his office that night. That was on Saturday night.

Q. 14—Who, if you know, first mentioned to Deaton about going after Abner and Smith?

Ans.—Jim Hargis; he told me he had sent Bob for them.

Ques. 15.—Did you and Deaton ever talk about the matter?

Ans.—He come back and I asked him when them men was coming, and he didn't talk much; he seemed to be kinda shy.

Ans.—I don't think I saw him that day. I don't know whether he was in town that day.

Ques. 17—Did you and Deaton ever talk about it after the killing?

Ans.—I don't think we did. Things like that are not discussed much among members of the band after the thing happens.

Ques. 18—About how many shots were fired at Cockrill?

Ans.—I fired three and they fired two apiece. I suppose this is a surprise to you, but I just got tired of everything being laid on me and them not standing by me. If they had stuck to me I would have died for them. I wanted to meet that man Cockrill in the street and fight it out, but Jim Hargis wouldn't let me.

Ques. 19—Do you know whether any of these men got any pay for what they did?

Ans.—I don't know, but I am under the impression that Abner and Smith did, but I couldn't swear to that.

Ques. 20—What did Hargis tell you, if anything, about Smith and Abner when he told you they would help to do this?

Ans.—He said "they was all right."

Ques. 21—What day of the week did you have the shooting with Jim Cockrill at the Arlington Hotel?

Ans.—I don't remember, and I will say here that after the shooting at the Arlington Hotel Callahan said to me he would have to remove me as his deputy; that it wouldn't do for me to be a deputy when Cockrill was killed. He did remove me, and I never asked him to appoint me after that.

Ques. 22—And when was the talk with Hargis with reference to the shooting at the Arlington Hotel?

Ans.—The same day.

Ques. 23—Where did Abner and Smith come from?

Ans.—I don't know. From home, I suppose.

Ques. 24—Where was their homes?

Ans.—I think Smith had been married a time or two. I am not sure. I think he had been loafing around Callahan's some. Abner lived in the edge of Perry. I was never at their house.

Ques. 25—On the night Abner and Smith came to Jackson to see Hargis, you and Elbert Hargis were sleeping in your room in the old Hargis building?

Ans.—Yes, sir; and Judge Hargis was in his office in the new building. When they come they kept hollowing for him and couldn't raise him and they waked Elbert and me and we went down and rattled the door and threw rocks against the side of the house and waked Jim Hargis and he come down.

Ques. 26—Then you and Elbert took their horses to the Hargis barn and put them up for the night?

Ans.—Yes, sir.

Ques. 27—Then you came back to the private office of Hargis and went in?

Ans.—Yes, sir; where these men and Jim Hargis were.

Ques. 28—Where were these men when you went up?

Ans.—They were up talking to Hargis in his office; we drank some and I went on back and went to bed and Elbert and them went off together and promised to meet me at the hollow the next morning.

Ques. 29—Then the next day was the day Hargis sent them a basket of provisions by you?

Ans.—Yes, sir; the next morning, Sunday morning.

Ques. 30—That night they waded the creek and went through the corn field to Elbert Hargis' house?

Ans.—On Sunday morning they did.

Ques. 31—And before they went you went to see that the way was clear for them?

Ans.—Yes, sir; to my grandmother's; you know in the country the poor people come around sometimes for milk and things like that and I didn't want anyone there. No one was there but grandma, and I went back to the graveyard; it slants down a little and I could see them in the corn rows and they could see me and I motioned to them to come on.

Ques. 32—And they stayed at Elbert Hargis' until Sunday night?

Ans.—Yes, sir; until Sunday night after dark; they stayed hid there, and I told my grandma that they were dodging the officers to prevent arrest; that night after dark we went to the Courthouse in Jackson.

Ques. 33—The time you went up and rapped on the door, was that the first time you saw them in the courthouse?

Ans.—No; I had been up there several times. Brother Will run a whisky shop there at that time and I would go down there and bring them whisky and stuff and we understood that I was to rap three times to let them know it was me.

Ques. 34—Did you and Bill Britton ever discuss the killing before it was done?

Ans.—On Sunday we did. He came to my grandma's sometime that day and he goes to town Sunday night.

Ques. 35—Was he in company with Abner and Smith that day?

Ans.—Yes he went into the room where they were; there was no one there but Abner, Smith, Britton, Elbert Hargis, Grandma and me that day and we all, except grandma, talked over the killing.

Ques. 36—You stayed there all that day?

Ans.—Yes, sir; after I came from town.

Ques. 37—Did you go into Jackson that night with them?

Ans.—Yes, sir; that night.

Ques. 38—After the killing of Cockrill these men stayed in the courthouse until that night about 10 o'clock?

Ans.—They stayed there until after dark in the old Sheriff's office at the head of the stairs. You know I went up there with old Uncle Bill Spencer to hel pearch the courthouse.(?) Well, after he passed that office I knew everything was all right and I followed him on downstairs. If Uncle Bill had tried to go in that room I would have stopped him, but would not have used any violence.

Ques. 39—Who went for the horses for them that night?

Ans.—Elbert and I did. We went to the barn and got them.

Ques. 40—Then you two walked to the bridge before them?

Ques. 41—What was your purpose in so doing?

Ans.—To see that the way was clear for these men; to see that no one was loafing around to identify them.

Ques. 42—And they rode down on their horses and bid you good-bye at the far end of the bridge from Jackson?

Ans.—Yes, sir; they lent over on their horses and told us good-bye.

Ques. 43—What time in the night was that?

Ans.—Eight, 9 or 10 o'clock; a good while after dark; we were waiting for the people to get off the street you see.

Ques. 44—How often did you and Callahan discuss this Cockrill killing before he was killed?

Ans.—I don't remember, only the day he was killed, and it was talked in his presence at the Hargis store. These men asked me if Callahan was in town; he had gone down on the railroad that day and had come back on the same train with Cockrill I think; I know he came back with him, but am not sure when he went down. I told them he was in town and they asked me to go down and tell him to come up there, and I goes and tell him, and he comes up; he was at Hargis' store. I didn't go up with him, but in a few minutes I seen Jim Cockrill on the corner and I went up and said, "if we was going to do this thing, we had better do it;" Jim was standing by the Crawford Building, and when I said that, Callahan said "I had better get out of here," and he went out and over to Hargis' store.

Ques. 45—How long was that before the killing?

Ans.—A few minutes; a very few minutes.

Ques. 46—Did you and Smith and Abner know that Britton was on guard?

Ans.—I did, I don't know that they did; but I was standing there when Hargis told Bill Britton to go over there and get in Judge Fleenor's office at the foot of the steps and he said, "Die before you let anyone go up them steps."

Ques. 47—Where did you and Elbert go after bidding Smith and Abner good-bye at the bridge?

Ans.—I believe back to my grandmother's; you see it has been so long, a man can't remember all those things, but I think back to my grandma's, but we might have stayed at Hargis's.

Ques. 48—Did Hargis tell you where he would be while this shooting was going on in case you should need him?

Ans—No, he didn't name it.

Ques. 49—After the shooting you slipped down the banisters and out the side door and went to his store and up stairs?

Ans—Yes, I went to the top of the stairs and there was some men's clothing piled there and Jim Hargis and Doug Hays were standing there leaning on a pile of clothing, and Jim said to me, "Go back to that courthouse and not let anyone go in where these men are."

Ques. 50—Did Doug Hays have anything to do with this killing?

Ans—If he did I know nothing about it.

Ques. 51—When did you next see Hargis after the killing other than the time just after the shooting when he told you to go back to the courthouse and let no one go in?

Ans—After the man was shot and I goes back to the courthouse and I still has my pistol in my hand—they have told the truth about that and I will give them credit for that—Hargis hollowed to me and said, "Get out of that door; some one will kill you." I was drinking and I said, "I ain't uneasy." My brother Will then come running up from his place of business and said: "Curt, did you have anything to do with this?" I said "no," and he went on back. He is a good man.

Ques. 52—Did you and Hargis after the killing ever talk of it?

Ans—Yes, sir; when Jim Cockrill was taken to Lexington he said he believed there would be trouble over this—it seemed he kind of looked ahead. I told him the man was killed—that I had killed him the first shot. I am the man that shot him in the side. I said the man is killed; I don't think he will live long and Jim Hargis said, "I am sorry you didn't kill him dead; there will be trouble over this."

Ques. 53—Where was this conversation had.

Ans—There about the store.

Ques. 54—Did you and Callahan ever refer to it after the killing?

Ans.—Jess Spicer or Jim Hargis, one or the other, give it to me; I don't remember which. Two or three days after the killing, you know, there were a lot of cans and beer bottles up there in the old Sheriff's office, and I takes a sack and goes up there and gets them and pours them out behind Hargis' store. After I got through the shooting of Cockrill I kinda leaned in the window and reached for the key to the door, and I gave Smith my gun and he told me afterwards that it was still cocked when I give it to him.

Ques. 56—You did look out the window, then, after the shooting?

Ans.—Yes, sir.

Ques. 57—John Patrick, then, swore the truth against you?

Ans.—He swore the truth, but he had a lot of malice against me, though.

Ques. 58—When going from the window to the stairway did you run?

Ans.—Yes, sir; on my tiptoes.

Confession As To Marcum Killing.

Ques. 1—Now, Curt, tell us what you know about the Marcum killing.

Ans.—I am the man that killed him.

Ques. 2—Tell all you know about it.

Ans.—I will recall that the best I can. Before he was killed Jim Hargis and me wasn't on good terms. He had me sent to jail for beating up a fellow or two that didn't like me. On Sunday morning I went to town from my grandmother's; I had lived there and stayed there lots and lots. I had been working in the logs at Camp Christy or Robbins' post-office, and had got my finger hurt and was off for several days: I was back and forward between there and my grandmother's. I goes to town on Sunday morning, and I stayed at the jail that night and on Sunday morning Callahan sent for me to come to the Courthouse; at that time I never went to Hargis' store at all. Asbury Spicer come down to the jail and said Callahan said for me to come to the Courthouse, and when I went Callahan said, "Curt, Tom White is here and we want to kill Jim Marcum to-morrow, and there is no one on earth I can depend on like you." He gave me a thirty-eight special swinging cylinder and told me not to leave town that night, and I said, "All right." I am not positive whether this was in the forenoon or afternoon on Sunday. Well, I loafs around a good deal with Asbury that day, and Charlie Sewell and Tom Spencer was down at the river fishing, and we walked down there and just as we got there the boat capsized and I saved Tom's life. Well, I stayed at the jail that night, and the next morning I was in the parlor talking to Nancy Spencer—she was always the best friend I ever had in my life and if I had listened to her advice I wouldn't be here to-day. She always told me to keep away from them people a thousand times—she was cleaning the parlor and Asbury comes up and calls me out and says Marcum was up there. But before all this Asbury comes to me and says they wanted Marcum killed and this was on Sunday. He said Callahan and Jim Hargis wanted Marcum killed and said that Tom White either was there or would be there to help kill him. I said to Asbury that I didn't want to have anything more to do with Hargis; that he had ruined my life getting me into the Cockrill killing, but I told him I would do anything in the world for Callahan. Later the same day he came to me and told me that Jim Hargis said "he didn't have a thing in the world against me, and that he would spend his last dollar for me," and said he wanted me to do this for him and Callahan. This conversation was about the Courthouse somewhere. Then Callahan, after that, comes and gives me the pistol and said he wanted me to kill him and "they would never quit me." I told him I hated to do it, but that I would do anything in the world for him, and I would.

(I would rather have my right arm cut off than to make this confession, but they have treated me in a way I have to do it.)

Well, I loafed around all day and stayed at the jail that night and the next morning I was in the parlor with Nancy Spencer, as I said before, and Asbury come to me and told me that that fellow was up there (meaning Marcum) and that he, Asbury, would be over about Hargis' store; that Tom White was going to raise a fuss with Marcum and kill him, but that if Marcum was getting the best of it I was to kill him, or, in other words, I was not to let him kill White. White and I never spoke to each other about this until that morning. Of course, we both knew our business. I was in the street talking to John E. Patrick before the killing and Marcum went into the Courthouse White was in Day Brothers' store; he comes down by the old well and went into the side door of the Courthouse and I followed him; he was to raise this fuss and if Marcum was getting the best of Tom I was to kill Marcum. White walked right into the Courthouse and right by Marcum and looked at him (I suppose he looked at him from what I hear since); I seen Tom wasn't going to shoot him and I was about two-thirds drunk and I shot Marcum and when he fell I walked up and shot Marcum again. Ewen swore the truth. After this I asked White why he didn't shoot Marcum and he said that Jim and Ed told him that if he was standing where he could be seen not to shoot him, if there was too many around, but you see I didn't know this. They had told us before that Marcum would be at the Courthouse that day to file some papers or something, and Callahan told me he would be at the Courthouse that morning. After Marcum was killed I told White, after he come back from Hargis' store, "lets go down to my grandmother's" and he said all right and we goes down the street—Mrs. Johnson manufactured a whole lot right along there—we goes down to Goodloe Comb's drug store or blind tiger and bought a quart of whisky and we crossed the river bridge and goes on down the river to my grandmother's.

Ques. 3—Did you and Hargis ever talk together before the Marcum killing?

Ans.—No, sir; we were not on friendly terms at that time; I only heard from him through Spicer.

Ques. 4—Did you talk about it after the killing?

Ans.—Yes, sir; when he came to the jail to see me after I had been taken back by the soldiers.

Ques. 5—What did he tell you then?

Ans.—"Stand pat; I will spend every cent I have to get you out." I told him I had never left a friend yet.

Ques. 6—When you and Callahan talked about the killing did he give you his reasons for wanting Marcum out of the way?

Ans.—I heard it discussed in a general way long before that.

Ques. 7—What was his reason?

Ans.—Well he said he thought Marcum was going to have him killed or something like that. Long before the killing Hargis told me on one occasion that he could put two or three men in an old house that belonged to grandma and they could put on broad-brimmed cowboy hats and long linen dusters and they could kill Marcum as he passed and then go across the bottom and back into the mountains and nobody would ever know who did it.

Ques. 8—Did they fear him in their political deals?

Ans.—I never heard that discussed.

Ques. 9—Did you and White talk over the killing at your grandmother's?

Ans.—Oh, yes.

Ques. 10—Did you and White go to Henry Freeman's?

Ans.—Yes, sir, on the night of the day Marcum was killed we did go there and get some beer, but I didn't make the statement Freeman said I did.

Ques. 11—Where did this conversation between you and Callahan and in which he gave you the pistol take place?

Ans.—In the corridor of the courthouse and he says "now for a good stall you fellows (Spicer and me) go down about Hordes' Hotel and make it appear you heard some noise down there and had come down there to arrest some people." Spicer was a deputy at that time.

Ques. 12—Where was Asbury Spencer at the time you killed Marcum?

Ans.—All the evidence goes to show that he was at Hargis' store, for he told me "if things get too hot I will be at Hargis' store."

Ques. 13—Have you and Hargis ever discussed the killing of Marcum since it took place?

Ans.—We never have; he came once to see me in the Lexington jail the day I was taken there; he came to see me that night.

Qques. 14—Did he say anything to you about it then?

Ans.—No, sir, he brought some one with him then.

Ques. 15—Did you see Ewen talking to Marcum when you shot Marcum?

Ques. 16—Did you know that Ewen had seen you?

Ans.—Yes, sir; he didn't see me the first shot, but as I advanced for the second shot he stuck his head around the door and I would have shot him, but he dodged too quick. The reason I shot Marcum the second time was "dead men tell no tales."

Ques. 17—Did you on any other occasions than these know of any plans to kill Marcum?

Ans—No, sir, but I have heard them talk very rough about him.

Ques. 18—Do you know anything about Smith and Abner being in that rock quarry?

Ans—I only know what White told me. He told me that he told Jim Hargis and Ed Callahan that Mose Feltner was a traitor, but they would not believe it. White told me that the stone quarry story as testified to by Feltner was true, every word of it. He said that Feltner shot his gun off there one morning out in the crowd in front of Marcum's house.

Ques. 19—What was the shooting of the gun by Feltner for?

Ans.—I don't know.

Ques. 20—Did White think it was intended to give warning to Marcum?

Ans.—I don't know I ever discussed it much with him.

Ques. 21—Are there any other matters relating to the Marcum killing that you recall?

Ans.—None at all.

Ques. 22—All the persons connected with the Marcum killing that you know of were Hargis, Callahan, Asbury Spicer, White and yourself?

Ans.—That is all that I know of; Elbert was at home when we got down there and knew nothing of it.

Ques. 23—Did B. F. French have anything to do with that killing?

Ans.—He never named it to me in his life, only when he was defending me.

Ques. 24—Was anything said about Hargis and Callahan being armed and being in the Hargis store so they could take a hand in the shooting?

Ans.—No, sir, I never heard a word of that; you fellows have been making it so hot for us we haven't had a chance to talk to each other.

Ques. 25—Did you and Callahan ever talk about the Marcum killing after it was over?

Ans.—I don't remember; it has been so long, you know.

(There was never a man that has been punished as I have been; if they had stayed by me I would have been tortured to death with hot irons before I would have betrayed them, but they have sacrificed me, and Bill Britton is telling it all over the country that I could have saved him; why couldn't he have saved me? And Hargis and Callahan, in the damage suit at Winchester, stated that Jett and White alone was responsible for the killing of Marcum, and Jim Hargis went to Judge Hazelrigg at Winchester and wanted him to dismiss my appeal in the life sentence, without saying anything to me about it, and Judge Hazelrigg said he would not treat any man that way and he came to see me in the Louisville jail to get my consent. What do you think of a man treating a friend that way?)

Statements Concerning the Cox Killing.

Ques. 1—Curt, do you know anything about the murder of Dr. Cox?

Ans.—Yes, a little, but I didn't do that you know. I was Deputy Jailer, and was at the county jail when this man was killed; it was after supper, and I was upstairs in one of the bedrooms talking to the jailer, Uncle Bill Spencer, and his wife, and George Spencer and Hiram Hays; I had my shoes off; it was in warm weather; there were three shots fired, and I was close to the window and heard three shots, then the telephone rang, and the girls Liza and Nancy had company in the parlor, and when the telephone rang, one of them called upstairs and said they wanted me at a certain number. Whatever it was, it was the phone in the house Uncle Alex owned, but he wasn't living in it but he boarded there; I put on my shoes and hat and pistol and started running down the street. Uncle Alex lived about two blocks down, and when I come to his house I went to the front door and then around to the back porch, and Uncle Alex was standing on the back porch, and he asked me what that shooting was, and I said I didn't know, and Uncle Alex said, "Let's go down and see if Jim or any of them are hurt." Uncle Alex stopped at Jim's garden fence, I guess he was afraid to run in, but I was fearless and didn't care you know, and I went in to the yard, and in the shadow of the smokehouse—moon as bright as day, I shall never forget it—stood Ed Callahan, Jim Hargis, Bill Britton, Jess Spicer and Elbert Hargis, with two shotguns. I saw no pistols.

Ques. 2—How closew as this to where Dr. Cox was killed?

Ans.—It was in Jim's back yard.

Ques. 3—About how long was this after the killing?

Ans.—A few minutes; probably ten, fifteen or twenty minutes.

Ques. 4—Did any of these people see you?

Ans.—Of course they seen me as I come to them in the moonlight. They were in the shadow of the smoke-house.

Ques. 5—Did you join the crowd?

Ans.—Yes, sir, and Jim Hargis said: "You stay here with us to-night." I went back and told Uncle Alex that I had seen Uncle Jim and he come on in and in a few minutes he said, "I am going to the store;" I don't remember that he made any other remark while in the crowd than this: "I am going to the store." I asked what the shooting was, and some one said that Cox was killed; they sent me back to the jail after George Spencer and Hiram Hays and then I went back and stayed there with Jim Hargis until after Dr. Cox was dressed. They put me on picket duty on the veranda with a shotgun at Jim's house and Elbert stayed with me; we stayed there long enough to see them pack Cox from one room to the other and I said to Elbert: "I will have to have a drink," and we went down.

Ques. 6—What was it Hargis said to you about staying all night?

Ans.—He said, "stay with us." After a while I got tired and said, "I am going to brother Will's and get some whisky."

Ques. 7—Was there anything said about the killing of Cox after you approached the crowd at the smoke-house that night?

Ques 8—Why did they put you on picket duty that night?

Ans.—I suppose Hargis thought some one would shoot into the house; that the killing of Cox would cause an uprising.

Ques. 9—Did they say why they were standing there that night?

Ans.—Not a word; after I heard Dr. Cox was killed I knew.

Ques. 10—What time of night was it?

Ans.—After dark. I don't remember the exact time.

Ques. 11—You didn't need to ask any questions for your own information, did you, Curt?

Ans.—Not after I knew who was killed.

Ques. 12—You heard from this crowd that it was Dr. Cox that had been killed?

Ans.—Yes, sir; I heard Jim Hargis say 'He bellowed powerful." I never asked no questions.

Ques. 13—What kind of guns were those you saw there?

Ans.—One of them was a double-barreled breech loader, and the other was a Winchester pump gun.

Ques. 14—About how far was it from this smokehouse to where Dr. Cox was killed?

Ans.—I don't have much idea; about 200 yards, I guess.

Ans.—I think not from his actions, and he never named it to me in his life.

Ques. 16—As soon as he walked into this crowd and saw these people he said, "I am going to the store," and left?

Ans.—Yes, sir; he said "I am going to the store," and he did go.

Ques. 17—Where did Callahan go after the shooting?

Ans.—He stayed at Jim Hargis' house that night.

Ques. 18—Where did Bill Britton stay?

Ans.—At the store. When I got into the crowd that night Britton had one gun and either Elbert Hargis or Jess Spicer had the other. I am not sure which.

Ques. 19—When was this?

Ans.—After dark. I was turnkey at the jail then and we had had supper and was upstairs talking.

Ques. 20—Did you hear the shots fired before the telephone message?

Ans.—Yes, sir. Liza and Nancy Spencer had company in the parlor and they received the message and called me to come to the numbered phone in Uncle Alex.' house. One of these girls, which ever it was, said, "I think it is Alex," and I just broke and run over.

Ques. 21—How many shots did you hear?

Ans.—Three.

Ques. 26—Did you ever talk with Jim Hargis about that killing?

Ans.—No, sir, I never discussed that killing no way. That is one of the darkest things that ever was. I mean it was kept the quietest of any.

Ques. 27—You never talked about this killing to any of the parties that were there that night?

Ans.—Only in a general way and that was in several conversations.

Ques. 29—Did any one offer you any immunity or make you any promises to induce you to make this confession?

Ans.—Not a living soul on earth; not a one of my kinsmen know of it except Sam Jett; no one has ever promised me anything in no way, shape, form or fashion, nor have any hopes been held out to me. I just felt like I had been sacrificed long enough. I voluntarily wrote a letter to Uncle Sam Jett at Winchester, giving him to understand that I wanted to make a confession, and my determination to confess was made before I sent for Mr. Webster, and neither he nor any other officer ever discussed the matter of my confession with me before it was made. I went to Callahan and Hargis months ago and told them that I understood that I was going to have another trial, and I wanted them to get me a good lawyer and have things in shape, and neither of them ever answered my letters or come about me. You don't have no idea how they have treated me. If I was to get a man in trouble as they have me there is nothing in the world I wouldn't do for him.

I know no man ever made a confession but what the man he made it about and all their friends didn't say he was lying, but I have told the truth; I have not attempted to shield myself or any other man connected with these killings, and I will not swear anybody's life away. I have simply told the plain truth about it; no more and no less. I have been a villain in one sense of the word, but I have a good tender heart in me in one respect, and I don't make this confession because I fear the trial here in Cynthiana, because they would not hang me—I am as sure of that as I am that I am sitting in this chair—but I feel that I have been sacrificed long enough and have been deserted by these people I would have given my life for, and the only thing to do was to confess and tell the truth. They wrecked my life and I was simply a Robinson Crusoe's Friday for them; they sacrificed me just as Brigham Young sacrificed his trusted friend, John D. Lee.

You know I have been a bad man, but the people ought not to be too hard in passing judgment on me, for I was brought up under the direction of Jim Hargis and Ed Callahan, and they set me an example and are responsible for wrecking my life, making me a murderer and causing me to be in a felon's cell. But from this day on I am determined to lead a better life. I have turned over a new leaf and am going to ask forgiveness for my past life and be a good man.

WEDNESDAY........JUNE 13, 1906

"Business."

Tuesday Evening, June 11.—The New York market was stronger and higher in the early trading, but developed heaviness, closing fairly active, with a feeble rally, which advanced prices from the lowest level.

Money on call was easy at 2½ to 3 per cent. Time funds were dull and steady at 4 to 5 per cent. Sterling exchange was heavy.

Closing quotations on wheat for July delivery were up ⅛c to ⅜c. Corn was ½c higher and oats were up ⅜@½c.

The cotton market was moderately active and higher in the early trading, but weakened and closed slightly under opening prices.

The Chicago cattle market was steady to strong, the hog market strong to 5c higher and the sheep market steady to strong.

It is related by the Book of Genealogy that when the plan of the Creation had been nearly completed, a Council of the Gods was held, and that Jove was mightily pleased with himself and his work as he pointed out its perfections to the lesser deities. There was Europe and there was Asia, and there was Africa and there was Virginia. The assembled company was filled with amazement and delight. Mars contemplated with pride the soldier-like qualities of France, and Neptune rejoiced in the sailor-men of England. Back and forth Venus paraded the beauties of Circassia. Minerva called her heralds to proclaim and marshal the hosts of Philosophy and Arts and Letters circling round the globe from Pekin to London, from Paris to New York and Boston; in point of fact, from the head-waters of the Nile to the tide-waters of Hampton Roads and Pimlico Sound. There seemed no fault to find. At length Hercules arose. "Your Majesty," he said, addressing himself to Jupiter, "it is very fine. It is very fine indeed. Yet there seems something lacking. If I may make so bold, I would have you commit to the divine architect who has builded with such intelligence, the creation of yet another example of the all-seeing power of the gods. I would entreat you to fashion me a man, Sir, in the image of Apollo, and a woman compounded of the excellencies of Juno and Venus and Minerva. Set these two a little apart, and send them forth to lead the sons and daughters of men where travail is sorest and dangers are greatest, even through the fastnesses of the dark and bloody ground, carrying along with the Torch of Civilization the sun-kissed banners of Virtue and Valor and Prowess." And Jove exclaimed: "What, Hercules! would'st have me disarrange the plan of the Universe and raise a rival, it may be, to the Throne itself?" "Nay, nay," the God of Strength replied, "not so. I would have the twain invested with none of our God-like attributes. I would have a man, not a God; a woman, not a Goddess. Upon a stout Scotch-Irish stock engraft me the lovable, but mortal, infirmities of the Gascon and the Celt—the gift of gab and the dare-devil spirit—leaven the loaf with the saving grace of Honor and Humor—let the product be what they call in America, 'a dead-game sport,' your Majesty; and I'll warrant me, there shall be rejoicing on Earth and in Olympia, and not a whit of hurt to Gods, or Men." No sooner said than done, and when the Fairy Godmother bent over the cradle thus brought to her notice she exclaimed: "I bless thee once, I bless thee thrice, and I call thee Kentucky!"

Back To the Old Home.

To-day finds Louisville the Mecca of thousands of Kentuckians who have made their homes in other States and have returned to the "Home Coming" prepared for them, to renew their old associations of the Bluegrass State. It is needless to welcome them in formal phrase while everything which meets their eye, as the waving banners, the sounds of music and the warm grasp of the hand, speaks louder than words. In contemplating the scenes which their presence affords, the uppermost thought is naturally one of regret that Kentucky should ever have lost a single one of the noble band of men and women who have so greatly enriched the various States to which they have transferred their allegiance. And yet, with what pride we can contemplate the great benefit the Commonwealths, which have fallen heir to such acquisition, have reaped, although at our expense. The roll embraces Governors, Senators, Judges, captains of industry and sterling citizens in every calling of life who have helped to raise the standard of every State and community in which they have cast their lot.

It is vain, however, to deplore such loss, and nothing is left but to view it philosophically and congratulate the States which have thus profited, feeling that in their success through such acquisition Kentucky shares with pride in the good work done by her children, who though living beyond the boundary are still her children. And as such she receives them to-day with open arms and embraces them with a welcome full of maternal affection.

"Shake."

Never before in all its history has there dawned a day so happy and so proud; so given over to the spirit of brotherhood; so dedicated to soul-service, not forgetting other requirements of the inner and spiritual man; for the doors are unhinged, the bridle is off, and he who wants for anything is no true Kentuckian if he fails to get it!

We celebrate ourselves.

Let us, before the week is ended, make a little tour of introspection; hunt up the record and look into our hearts; take stock, as it were, cast up the account, and strike a balance, if we can, to our own good and the glory of God and the grand old Commonwealth. For once, no Politics.

Why is it that we have always fought our political battles so savagely, and in our civil contentions are often so relentless, one toward another? In that Scotch-Irish crucible did a drop of the Corsican get by chance interfused with the blood of the Gascon and the Saxon? We are not an ungenerous people. We are not a malignant people. Our anger is quick to cool. Yet it is true that we draw our party lines as if they were lines of battle, and have done so from the first; though, after the direst conflict of them all, when party lines were actual lines of battle, we were first to know the war was ended.

May it not be that, in many ways, we are merely grown-up children who make more noise and worse faces than we in reality mean? A bit of humbug and buncombe goes a long way with us, but most of us are readier to forgive than to fight, and we all "feel real sorry" when something goes seriously wrong. As a mountain-man once said, "What's the use o' killing? When he's dead, he don't know!" What a good thing it would be if one could slay his adversary, and bring him safely to life again so that he could and would know. They who tell ugly stories about us, don't know us. Even the feudists are not as bad as they have been painted, and the last of them seem about to depart forever.

Take that aspect of Kentucky life, and consider how it has been exaggerated and misconceived. The vendetta, of which we hear so much and see so little, has had an existence over but a scant area, and that far from busy haunts and ways, impervious to the outer world. However bloody and exterminate, they were for the most part but family and neighborhood broils. Nor did any of them have political origination or significance. There were yet in Kentucky at the close of the Sectional War regions as isolated and inaccessible as any district of France in the middle ages. Remote, untutored, keenly individualized, the deadly weapon was the only arbiter. They knew no law except the law of force. As the Aborigines receded before the plowshare, did these children of nature recede before the railway. There is no section of Kentucky to-day where life is not entirely safe, and there never has been any section, or any time, when property was not.

Killing indeed has always been cheaper in Kentucky than stealing. The sense of humor which Hercules was good enough to obtain for us of Jupiter may have a leaning toward the eccentric. It may tend toward a certain vanity of self-love. It forbids us to take ourselves too seriously—sometimes perhaps not quite seriously enough—for aside from our boasted staples—our brands and our thoroughbreds—our women and our warriors—we have other things than orators and distilleries, race-courses and statesmen, to brag about. Did we not contribute McDowell to Medicine and Shaler to Geology, Jouett to Painting, and Hart to Sculpture, and to the world at large Audubon, Tom Corwin and Proctor Knott? What is the matter with James Lane Allen and Cale Young Rice, and Madison Cawein, and Robert Burns Wilson and John Fox? What is the matter with Harrison Robertson, and Mrs. Madden Martin, the sweetest and truest singer of childhood, and everybody knows that there is nothing the matter with "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

So, it is eat, drink and be merry each and every one; with never a word the ears of a lady might not hear; none of your "Blarst my eye, Bill," and "Go to Blank, Sam," but simply and gently, "I looks towards you, Mr. Brown!"

Shake!

Kentucky In Oratory and Statesmanship.

The statesmen of Kentucky have nearly all been orators. The great statesmen have been great orators. It is eminently proper, therefore, that the two should be considered together. This State has given to the country some of its wisest statesmen, and nearly all of them have been orators of eminence.

As the State of Kentucky was the first-born of Virginia, so the people were largely descended from that stock. In Virginia, before the separation, oratory flourished and statesmanship was at home. Patrick Henry looms up as the great orator of the Revolutionary period, but there were many others whose powers were scarcely inferior. The young men of Virginia were trained in the schools of the prophets and their lips were touched with the sacred fire of eloquence. They knew how to appeal to the popular heart, and their eloquence roused the popular enthusiasm for liberty to the highest pitch. Richard Henry Lee supported the patriot cause by the fire and splendor of his eloquence. His relative, Henry Lee, will always be remembered for his splendid tribute to the memory of Washington—"First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen." This attachment to oratory so marked in Virginia was a part of the heritage of Kentucky. Along with it went a profound interest in public affairs and a genius for statecraft which shone conspicuously in many departments. Of Washington we need not speak, and Jefferson was almost a universal genius in all that pertained to public affairs. Time would fail to tell of George Mason, Peyton and Edmund Randolph and many others, while John Marshall will always be remembered as one of the greatest of our jurists.

Born amid such surroundings, Henry Clay early in life came to Kentucky, and his name became inseparably associated with the State of his adoption. His reputation as an orator and statesman is a part of the heritage of the whole country, but it is particularly the property of Kentucky. For a long series of years he was a party leader in the nation and his reputation as a statesman is quite secure. But he was even more remarkable as an orator, and he made a reputation which thousands of Kentuckians have sought to emulate. It has often been remarked that the speeches of Henry Clay that have been preserved in print give but a very inadequate idea of his wonderful power over men. His oratory was of that kind described by Demosthenes, whose first, second and third characteristics are alike found in action. His words came "hissing hot from his soul," and it was a most masterly soul. His iron will bore down before it everything else in his own party, and it only failed to rule the country because it encountered other wills as strong as itself. His was a sort of triumphant oratory in which the speaker infused his own spirit into his hearers and bore down all opposition among those who were present. What he said imparted less than the way in which he said it.

About the time that Mr. Clay was going off the stage John Cabell Breckinridge was coming on. His progress was rapid, for in half a dozen years he rose from the position of a member of Congress to the vice presidency of the United States at a time when he was barely eligible. His grasp of the principles of statecraft was quick and firm and his eloquence placed him on a level with the greatest men of the nation. His majestic presence, his tuneful voice, his splendid rhetoric and his inexorable logic made him the most formidable of opponents on the hustings, while his wide and accurate knowledge gave him the first rank in all the deliberative bodies in which he served. Driven into exile from his native State by evil associations and the circumstances which surrounded him, he made in the land whose cause he espoused a splendid reputation both in the council chamber and the field, but unfortunately he was spared but a short time after he returned to his early home. While it is impossible to convey in writing any notion of his magnificent oratory, it has been remarked that his speeches read uncommonly well, and indicate that the graces of his oratory did not mislead his hearers when they felt that they were in the presence of a master mind.

It would be long to tell of the many gifted sons of Kentucky whose burning eloquence has done so much to make their connections a part of our country's love. John J. Crittenden stands high as a coadjutor of Henry Clay. Richard H. Menefee went over to the majority while yet young, but left behind a reputation for remarkable brilliancy. The Marshalls—Thomas and Edward—were justly celebrated for their impassioned oratory. J. Proctor Knott, now passing the evening of life in dignified retirement, has been as justly celebrated for his firm and sure grasp of constitutional principles and for his almost universal knowledge as for his wit and eloquence. John G. Carlisle, though not celebrated for his electric oratory, has always been heard with delight, and he has carried pure reason, with unexampled clearness of statement, to a degree never excelled by any public man.

To some it may seem that the greatness of Kentucky, alike in oratory and statesmanship, is in the past. It is hardly needful to say that there is no reason for discouragement. Times have changed and the public evidences of our high position may not be so conspicuous, but our young men are not inferior to their fathers in statesmanship, and when occasion requires they will not fail to exhibit those oratorical powers which are their heritage. The past is secure and the future may well be awaited with confidence.

The Hero of Sandusky.

Several weeks ago Col. R. M. Kelly, a Federal veteran of the late war, in charge of the Federal cemeteries in this vicinity, received a communication from Washington requesting him to ascertain the burial place of Col. George Croghan, who distinguished himself in the war of 1812 and was known as the Hero of Sandusky. Search was made in the old family burial ground at Locust Grove, the old home of his father, Maj. William Croghan, near Louisville. The first examination was without result, as the ground was covered thickly with periwinkle and vines. Later Mr. Webb Hayes, son of the late President Hayes, arrived and a closer examination and clearing of the ground resulted in finding a small headstone lying flat, bearing the letters Col. G. C.. Upon exposing the coffin, which was of mahogany, the identification was made complete, and the remains were taken by Mr. Hayes to Fremont, O., to be interred near a handsome monument erected to his memory at Fremont, the site of old Fort Sandusky, the residence of ex-President Hayes.

Col. Croghan was born at Locust Grove November 15, 1791, his father, Maj. William Croghan, having built the large brick house which still stands in good preservation, in 1797. It was here that George Rogers Clark, who was the brother of Maj. Croghan's wife, spent the last years of his life, and it was in the same burial ground that he was interred. Twenty-five or thirty years ago his remains were removed to Cave Hill cemetery, where they are marked by a plain granite headstone. Col. Croghan was graduated at William and Mary College, Virginia, in 1810, and when about twenty years of age served with distinction in the battle of Tippecanoe. He was promoted to a captaincy in March, 1812, and a year later became Aide de Camp to Gen. Harrison, with the rank of Major. On the 2d of August, 1813, while in charge of Fort Stevenson, at Lower Sandusky, the fort was attacked by a superior British force, and its fall seemed almost inevitable. But the defense was conducted with such skill and spirit that the enemy, under Gen. Proctor, were repulsed and forced to retire. Gen. Harrison in his official report gave great credit to the young officer, saying among other words of compliment: "It will not be among the least of Gen. Proctor's mortifications that he has been baffled by a youth who had just passed his twenty-first year."

From that time Col. Croghan was known always as the Hero of Sandusky, the toast of the army, and admired and honored by all. The ladies of Chillicothe presented him with a sword. In 1835 Congress voted him a gold medal for his gallantry. In 1814 he was promoted Lieutenant Colonel of the regular army, an exceptional honor for one so young. He resigned in 1817 and took up his residence in New Orleans, where he was postmaster in 1824. He was some years later appointed Inspector General of the army, and died in New Orleans of cholera January 8, 1849.

It is gratifying to know that his memory has been so deservedly honored upon the very scene of his gallant service, and that his remains have been rescued from the obscurity in which they had reposed for more than half a century. The recognition of his services, while thus signally exemplified, is another reminder to Kentucky of the neglect, which has so long been exhibited, of the memory of his still more illustrious kinsman, George Rogers Clark. Although his title to it is universally recognized, no shaft marks his last resting place, and no statue or public memorial attests the honor in which Kentucky cherishes his name, although nearly a century has passed since his death.

Eleven Minutes a Day.

Julius Guesde, one of the French Socialists who heads a school of his own, lays down that in a properly organized community, the working day would be eighty minutes long, but he says a man ought to be able to secure a subsistence by working eleven minutes out of twenty-four hours.

His eleven minutes theory is based on statements to the effect that in the United States the labor of seven men is sufficient to cultivate wheat enough and make baked bread for 1,000 customers. This gives about eleven minutes to provide bread for one man.

It must be said, however, that man cannot live by bread alone, but must have a great many other things. This seems to be admitted by Mr. Guesde when he allows eighty minutes for a suitable working day, but at the same time he must be figuring on the absolute necessaries of life. It is hardly probable that men who do the work of the world will ever be willing to put up with simply enough to keep soul and body together. A still more interesting question is, if men work but eighty minutes a day, what they will do with the other twenty-two hours and forty minutes. They cannot sleep all that time, and there is very serious danger that they would either get into mischief during their idle time, or would so multiply their wants that they would realize the necessity of doing more work in order to get something beyond the mere necessities of life.

Too much work is bad for mankind beyond a doubt, but too little has also its disadvantages. It seems hardly probable that we shall ever get down to an average of eleven minutes, or even of eighty. The men who spend 1,449 minutes per day in inaction, do not constitute the best type of humanity.

A Famous Murder Case.

On March 31, 1904, Miss Mabel Page, a most estimable lady, while alone in her father's home at Weston, Mass., was stabbed to death. Charles L. Tucker, who lived at Auburndale, near by, was arrested for the crime and held to await the action of the grand jury. He was indicted and pleaded not guilty. In the following winter his trial took place, he was found guilty and sentenced to be electrocuted. He twice appealed to the State Supreme Court without success. The case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, which had no jurisdiction, so it dismissed the appeal. Extraordinary efforts were made to induce Gov. Curtis Guild, Jr., to commute the sentence. Numerous petitions were sent him.

He gave a hearing to the counsel and such witnesses as they chose to summon. The result was that he refused to interfere and Tucker was executed shortly after midnight yesterday morning. He died asserting his innocence.

The trial of Tucker was a long-drawn-out affair, and the testimony very voluminous. The evidence was circumstantial, but much of it very damaging. A broken knife that was found in his possession and which was said to fit the wounds, played a prominent part. Along with this was a stickpin which was said to have belonged to Miss Page. Still there was a good deal of testimony calculated to afford a loop to hang a doubt on, and many people were greatly surprised when a verdict of guilty was reached, and predicted that it would be overturned on appeal.

Those who are acquainted with the country for miles around Boston are aware that there is a congeries of towns and villages, and that a stranger may go from one to another without being aware that he has gone through more than one municipality. When he crosses Charles river from Auburndale on a bridge he would suppose he was still in the outskirts of Auburndale. From Charles river bridge to the Page house, one goes through a region that seems like a thickly settled tract of country rather than a village. The houses sit back from the road. Along this road, known as South street, Tucker is known to have gone on March 31, as far as "Cutter's Corner," which is simply a crossing of roads. The Page house is just beyond this corner. He left the bridge about noon and was back in the same neighborhood in fifty minutes. It is a pretty long road, and not very smooth. The jury had to believe that he had made the round and committed the murder in less than an hour. A good many people did not believe it could have been done, and so felt sure that Tucker was innocent. It was contended that there was a mistake about the stickpin.

Gov. Guild reviewed the whole case in the statement in which he refused to interfere. He had read the entire record of the trial, 2,696 pages. He had gone over the ground with time tests. He had fitted the blade of Charles Tucker's knife into the slit in the blood-stained corset of Mabel Page. He said that no medical authority who actually saw the wounds of Mabel Page had ever wavered in the statement that they might have been made by the knife which Tucker had tried to destroy. He therefore concluded that Tucker was guilty and he allowed the law to take its course.

The case is remarkable in many of its details, but it is especially so for the firm determination of the authorities to carry out the finding of the jury. Many thousands of people in Massachusetts and elsewhere believe that Tucker was innocent. They will continue to believe so, unless some further evidence comes to light, and will urge that his execution was a judicial murder. But the Judges who presided at his trial and heard all the evidence, the Governor who read it all, are firmly convinced of his guilt. The case has again started a movement for the abolition of the death penalty, and a good deal is likely to be yet said about it. Opinion is much divided as to the refusal of the Governor to commute the sentence.

Referring to Gov. Beckham, the Louisville Herald says:

"He has had, in Courier-Journal parlance, honors enough. Why look for more? A sin and a shame it is for one so very young to be so ambitious. An innocent Republican bystander, The Herald is filled with legitimate curiosity as to the cause of the senior organ's solicitude concerning Mr. Beckham's alleged undue ambition. The Governor is said to want the United States Senatorial toga, now worn by James B. McCreary. 'Sacrilege!' cried out Mr. Watterson. Too young for a place belonging to age! Too inexperienced for a position requiring length of years and service! Too much honor to give one who, for his years, has been already honored more than enough!"

In what part of the Courier-Journal, past, present or future, in this world, or in the world to come, did our esteemed contemporary discover any such suggestion, or intimation?

Here is a dazzling but true list of Louisville writers who have published books more or less known to fame:

Madison J. Cawein.

Barringer—Boswell.

Edward S. Boswell and Emma E. Barringer, daughter of Mrs. B. Barringer, were married yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride's mother at Midland and Everett streets. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. George S. Rowell, assisted by the Rev. George H. Means, pastor of the Lander Memorial Methodist church. Mr. Boswell is a well-known business man of Louisville. After the ceremony the couple left for Niagara Falls and Canada, where they will spend a two weeks' honeymoon.

Those Spring Finds.

The billionaire took down the vest that he had worn last year.
"I'll give it to some tramp," said he. "'Twill bring some hobo cheer."
There were old clothes in the corner; 'twas about to join the rest,
When he felt a little something 'neath the lining of the vest.

"Now, I wonder," quoth the magnate, "what it is that's hidden there."
And he fumbled with the lining, did the thrifty billionaire.
Then he yanked him forth a bundle and he whooped like any lad,
For he'd found a million dollars that he didn't know he had.

HOW SCHURZ CONSULTED ONE CLAIRVOYANTE.

A few days later I received a letter from Strodtmann in which he narrated the results of the seance as follows: The clairvoyante took one of my envelopes into her hand and said it contained the hair of a young man who looked thus and so. She then described my appearance in the most accurate way, and added that this young man had won notoriety by his connection with a bold enterprise, and that at the present time he was on the other side of a deep water in a large city and in the circle of a happy family. Then she gave a description of my character, my inclinations and my mental faculties, which, as I saw them in black on white, surprised me greatly. Not only did I recognize myself in the main features of this description, but I found in it also certain statements which seemed to give me new disclosures about myself. It happens sometimes when we look into our own souls that in our impulses, in our feelings, in our ways of thinking, we find something contradictory, something enigmatical which the most conscientious self-examination does not always suffice to make clear. And now there flashed from the utterances of this clairvoyante gleams of light which solved for me many of those contradictions and riddles. I received—so to speak—a revelation about my own inner self, a psychological analysis which I had to recognize as just, as soon as I perceived it.

What the clairvoyante said about the other envelope which contained Klapka's writing, was hardly less astonishing. She described the writer of the letters and figures contained in that envelope as a handsome, dark-bearded man with sparkling eyes, who once had governed a city full of armed men and besieged by enemies. The description of his person, of his past, and also of his character, as far as I knew it, was throughout correct.

AN APPRECIATION OF EX-GOV. PRESTON H. LESLIE.

It is somewhat remarkable that of the ten Governors of Kentucky within the last third of a century, seven of them are living. It is also gratifying to know that with but one exception they will take part in the "Home-coming." The Nestor of this group is Gov. Preston H. Leslie, now a resident of Helena, Mont. He was born in Clinton county, Ky., March 2, 1819, and is therefore in his eighty-eighth year, but still hale and vigorous, and actively engaged in the practice of law. His early life was that of the farmer boy of that day, who was brought up to work as the principal aim in life, with a limited attendance upon the primitive country school of that period. His first work in the line of advancement toward the position he ultimately earned among men, was as deputy for the County and Circuit Clerk, and was later able to attend for a time the county academy, where higher branches were taught than in what was then known as the Old Field free schools of the county. In 1840 he served as Deputy United States Marshal in taking the census, and in the following year received his license to practice law, the study of which he had been giving his spare time for several years. In 1844 he was elected a member of the Legislature from Monroe county, to Tompkinsville, the county seat of which he had removed several years previously, and was re-elected for a second term. In 1851 he was elected to the State Senate from Monroe and Barren counties. In 1853 he removed to Glasgow, Barren county, where he practiced law, devoting part of his time to farming interests.

The breaking out of the Civil War found Gov. Leslie in prosperous condition professionally and otherwise. He had accumulated a handsome estate in land and slaves, and his family constituted a happy household. He had been a Whig in politics, but like many of the followers of Mr. Clay, he became an ardent Democrat. Contemplating a removal to Texas in the northern part of which many relations and friends from Kentucky had established themselves, he went overland to that State in December, 1861, accompanied by his eldest son and twenty-six of his negroes together with a large part of his household effects. He had bought a large tract of unimproved land, but visited an improved farm, and leaving them in charge of his son to make a crop, returned to his family on horseback. In the meantime the tide of war had risen so high as to cause him to abandon any further idea of returning to Texas, and he remained in Kentucky. At its close, however, he went there to look after his faithful servants. Finding them where he had left them he gratuitously provided each of the families with provisions to live upon for a year, stock and tools to work with and had friends to assist the young girls in getting employment. This duty performed in a manner which well illustrates his spirit of benevolence in all things, he returned to Kentucky resolved to remain with his people and share the trials inherited from the war.

With his circumstances much impaired by the war Governor Leslie devoted himself assiduously to the practice of his profession and took no active part in politics until 1867, when he was again elected State Senator for four years. In 1869 he was elected Speaker by the Senate and on February 13, 1871, upon the resignation of Governor Stevenson who had been elected United States Senator, he became Governor for the unexpired term of about six months. In May he was nominated by the Democrats for Governor and in August, 1871, was elected by the very large majority of 37,156. The term of Governor Leslie was one of great personal success in meeting the confidence of the people expressed in his large majority. It was a period which called for the very qualities of firmness and justice he possessed in the transition from the passions of the war to the reinstatement of civil law and the restoration of peace among the late contending factions of war. There was much exhibition of lawlessness and bushwhacking by organized bands. These latter were promptly put down by the militia under his orders. Later the Ku-Klux created much alarm and the local authorities proved incompetent to suppress them, relying wholly on the central power of the State at Frankfort. It was then that Governor Leslie issued a proclamation in which he proclaimed the duty of the people in their local organization of courts and sheriffs to put down local disorders and declaring that to be effective and logical such efforts at suppression should begin with the community, each man being a peace officer to suppress crime and subject to the call of the Sheriff. He declined further military service except to assist the local authorities. The effect was magical. The county authorities and people responded to their duty and the Ku-Klux and other forms of lawlessness were suppressed with no further need of the militia.

Upon his retirement from office Gov. Leslie was shown by the people of Frankfort every mark of respect in the form of resolutions by the City Council and a public meeting of the citizens. Throughout the State similar feeling found expression in the creation of a new county in 1878 named for him. Returning to his home in Glasgow, he resumed his profession, and in 1881 he was elected Circuit Judge and served six years. In 1887 he was appointed by President Cleveland Territorial Governor of Montana, serving two years, and from 1894 to 1898 he was United States District Attorney. Having removed with his family to Helena, now the capital of the State, he established a law office there upon the expiration of his term, and has since been actively engaged in the pursuit of his profession. In January last, having occasion to visit his old home in Glasgow, he was invited by the General Assembly of Kentucky to visit Frankfort. By a happy coincidence upon his arrival he found ex-Senator Carlisle also there engaged in a case before the Appellate Court. Thus after twenty-eight years' absence by Gov. Leslie and fifteen by Senator Carlisle, the two who had been respectively Governor and Lieutenant Governor more than thirty years before received together the hearty congratulations of the Legislature. It was indeed a foretaste of the "Home-coming" which has opened wide its gates and extends a loving greeting for all her sons who have cast their fortunes in other lands. J. STODDARD JOHNSTON.

"COMING HOME," IN OLD KENTUCKY.

When the green wheat turns to gold and when the bluegrass blooms—in June;

Coming home—to breathe again the sweet and memory-laden air!
When the scent of new-cut clover calls the soul to fly from care;
When the waving elders beckon; when the shimmering lindens call,

Land, oh, land of love and beauty! where the full heart grows oppressed
With its own wild-winged emotions, over-borne and over-blessed;
'Tis the god's deep cup of vintage, too divinely fine and rare;

Summer land of clouds and sunshine, bitter storms thy life has known;
But thy ruling spirit lives and never leaves her shining throne;
And around that glorious figure—fair in their undying youth—

Wooded hills or level plains, in autumn's gold or summer's green;
For the soul of every picture which our eager hearts recall

A conscious light, a sacred hush falls over field and stream;
Each breeze that blows, each morning rose, each flower upon the stem,
Each clear brook and each jeweled blade speaks, first and last, of them.

Oh, to all Kentucky's children be ye kind, ye heavens fair!
Bend protectingly above them, in their home and everywhere;
May their courage never falter—may God's blessings never fail—

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

The University-Flexner School is the equal of any school in the country for laying deep and sound educational foundations. In laying these foundations not less stress is placed upon morals, manners and sound business principles than is placed upon the text-book drill necessary to equip students for entering the best classical or scientific schools.

This institution is thoroughly equipped with chemical and physical laboratories, shop for MANUAL training department, swimming pool, gymnasium, bowling alleys and tennis courts. Over a dozen schools receive its graduates upon CERTIFICATE. The faculty is large enough to enable the school to give special or individual attention wherever it may be needed.

Sinton-Milburn.

Wedding of Miss Grace Sinton and Mr. John W. Milburn Yesterday Evening.

Miss Grace Sinton and Mr. John W. Milburn were married at 6 o'clock yesterday evening at the home of the bride, 30 Crescent Court, Crescent Hill.

Miss Dora Stewart was maid of honor and the bridesmaids were Misses Louise Barbour and Virginia Pilcher.

Mr. Holloway Tarry, of New York, acted as best man, and Messrs. William Pirtle and John Edwards, of Cincinnati, were the groomsmen.

The bridal party entered the room to the bridal chorus from Lohengrin. During the ceremony Rubinstein's Melody in F was given.

The bride wore a gown of white net on chiffon, mounted on taffeta, made princess. She wore a veil and carried a loose cluster of bride's roses.

The bride's table was covered with a satin damask cloth draped in white tulle. In the center was a mound of pink sweet peas, around which were placed gold candlesticks holding pink candles with pink banquet shades.

The guests at the bridal table were, in addition to the bridal party, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ouerbacker, Miss Rebecca Bayless, of Covington; Miss Hortense Pilcher, Miss Nell Milburn, Messrs. Thomas P. Archer, of Indianapolis; A. Montenegro and A. H. Ross.

Mr. and Mrs. Milburn left later in the evening on a wedding trip East, and will return home July 1.

The Wedding of Miss Margaret Coleman and Mr. Walter Symington Clark Solemnized at Noon Yesterday.

The wedding of Miss Margaret Coleman and Mrs. Walter Symington Clark was solemnized at noon yesterday at the home of Miss Coleman's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Coleman, Fourth and Kentucky streets.

Miss Martha Marvin, the bride's cousin, was the maid of honor, and Mr. Clark was attended by his brother, Mr. James Clark, Jr., who served as best man.

The colors used in the decorations were green and white. The hall, drawing-room, library and dining-room having masses of ascension lilies used in ornament.

The wedding ceremony was performed in the drawing-room. The wedding party entered the room in the following order: First the Right Rev. Bishop McCloskey, followed by the groom and his best man, then Miss Marvin, who preceded the bride, who entered with her father. The bridal party stood in front of the mantel, which was hidden under clusters of ascension lilies. On either side the mantel were placed tall crystal vases filled with lilies.

The bride's table had a wreath formed of bouquets of swansonia tied with white gauze, which encircled the wedding cake in the center.

Special Venire Odered.

Lexington, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Unable to secure a jury in this county by which to try Ed Taylor, one of the three negroes charged with killing William Moore in this city nearly two years ago, owing to such a universal belief in the guilt of the accused, Judge Parker, of the Circuit Court, instructed Sheriff McElroy to summon a special venire of one hundred men from Woodford county to report here for jury service at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning. Three deputies went to Woodford county this afternoon to carry out the orders of the court.

MILLIONS OF CARDS

USED EACH YEAR IN UNITED STATES.

Big Profit To Manufacturers—All Classes and Kinds Made.

Last year more than 57,000,000 packs of playing cards were printed and sold at a profit by the manufacturers in Great Britain, France, Germany and the United States. Industrially regarded, the playing card business is one of the best manufacturing adjuncts to the world of workers. As a contributor to the revenues of those countries where cards are produced in quantity, says the Chicago Tribune, it is a gold mine.

At the same time, however, the expert player who is making a record at cards, or who has a desire to win money at the gaming table, finds little use for a card costing more than twenty-five or thirty-five cents a pack. His objection to the finer card is that it doesn't "feel" light and shuffles too easy. For the card "sharp," too, a card which has the standard back serves his illicit purpose of "marking" better than the more elaborate of "art" backs that can be designed in gold and colors. Incidentally, too, the necessities which the players feel for a frequent renewal of the pack makes the item of expense for handmade cards seem useless in whist games, where some one of the four players is likely to ask for a new deck after two or three games at the most. Cards at retail may be bought for 10 cents, 15 cents, 25 cents, 35 cents and 50 cents a pack.

Considering the handmade cards that cost from 75 cents to $1 a pack, it is interesting to remark that whatever elaborate departure may be made in the artistic effects of the pack, the consuming public will have no change made in the conventional card face, which has been in use for more than fifty years. This card face, as an expression of artistic design, is considered far below the standards of the designer of the present time. For the person who will afford a Bible in an edition de luxe up to $15 or even $20, the standard card face is quite enough to satisfy his artistic temperament. Time and again some enterprising card manufacturer who has made a hit with a novelty in a card back has tried to make the face of the card meet in artistic measure—and has failed. Not even the variation of the card spots will be tolerated; not even the "squeezer" mark on the corners may be altered. The player's first wish is that he shall recognize a card the instant he looks at its face, and to do this he insists upon the card face as it has stood for half a century at least.

That the back of a card shall not soil easily is one of the first desiderata of the player. In many of the ornate backs that have been put on the market there is so much light surface to carry the imprint of a finger. Then, in the cardboard base there are two sheets of paper pasted together, making the handsome card too thick, while the double coat of enamel with its composition "slip" makes it too smooth for handling by the player who does not stick always to this style of card.

The cheaper cards are printed from a continuous roll of cardboard, the backs printed first and the faces last, afterward covered with a coat of enamel which has the "slip" introduced by secret process. The hand-made article is made virtually a deck at a time from a flat sheet of cardboard. On this the backs are printed first upon the first coat of enamel, then the faces are printed upon the enamel, each color on back and face necessitating its separate imprint, and when these coats have dried another coat finishing the card with enamel and "slip" is applied front and back. Another drying process prepares the cardboard with its fifty-two imprints ready for the purchaser.

It is in punching the card from the strips into which sheets are cut that the highest degree of precision must be reached. The card punch fits into the die as closely as polished, tempered, sharpened steel can be made to fit, and after the punch has been perfected the greatest care must be taken of it in preserving the edges, so that not the slightest abrasion or irregularity shall exist in a pack of cards after they are assembled.

Only one punch can be used in cutting a pack. There may be 100 punches at work in the factory, but not one of these can cut a card effectively for the completion of a deck cut by another punch. Somewhere in the edge of such a card an unevenness would serve to identify it in the hands of a man who might try to use the pack into which it was placed. Punching the fifty-two cards of the deck with the same sharp punch, however, the result is a smooth, even surface as unintelligible to the touch as the faces or backs of the individual cards themselves.

When a pack of good cards has been as carefully printed and cut as is possible, there is still the closest inspection of each card entering into the box. No spot or misprint on face or back, no roughness of width is allowed to pass. But when all these precautions have been taken to the best of expert skill, the man who is a past master of cards may mark a deck inside of three minutes' play until any card he may need in the game is his for the looking at the back of it.

This fact, together with the superstitions of card players in general, does more for the playing business than anything else. If even the characters of the players in any game are irreproachable, this element of superstition appeals to some players. For instance, one has a run of bad luck with a pack of cards having a red back, he is likely to lay the fact to the color, and to ask for a blue back, or a green one, or for one having some color combination in which he has thought to have discovered "luck" in times past.

In many of the great card tournaments where whist is played no pack of cards is used a second time. It plays one game and is thrown aside, however serviceable it may prove to amateurs, into whose hands there are possibilities of its falling.

VALUED AID TO GARIBALDI

JESSIE WHITE MARIO'S DEATH DIFFERENT FROM LIFE.

WENT THROUGH SUCCESSION OF EARTHLY TEMPESTS.

[New York Herald.]

Tempestuous careers have often had quiet endings, but not often is so striking a contrast to be noted as that between the close of the life of Jessie White Mario and those eventful days that made her, as an Italian newspaper expresses it, "the impersonation of the Garibaldian and the Mazinian movements combined." Few visitors to Florence during the present generation were so much as aware of her existence. Those who met her saw her perhaps on her way from her modest home in the Via Romana to the school in which she taught English, found it difficult to picture this quiet-looking, white-haired old lady as Mazzini's coconspirator, Garibaldi's associate on the field of battle.

* * *

She Did Not "Look the Part."

As a matter of fact, there must always have been something incongruous between her personal appearance and her role as an Italian revolutionary. Marc Monnier wrote a novel dealing with the Neapolitan life of forty years ago, and Jessie White Mario's share in it as a reformer, in which he depicts her, in a spirit of not unfriendly caricature, as "Miss Hurricane." It is on record that she broke in upon King Victor Emmanuel in his private rooms, brandishing her famous green cotton umbrella in her excitement upon one occasion when she felt that immediate action on his part was called for in the interest of the great cause. "Il Re Galantuomo" was always susceptible to feminine influence, but never, probably, had he known it to take such a form as this. Even in the ardor of those days, people smiled at the figure of the quaintly-attired Englishwoman with the keen eyes and thin, resolute lips, while they admired and applauded her clear brain and warm heart.

* * *

Sailmaker's Daughter.

She was born in Gosport, a suburb of Portsmouth, and was the child of a sailmaker in the Isle of Wright, whose business had begun to dwindle in consequence of the growing use of steam. She was earning her own livelihood by teaching when, in 1854, she first set eyes on Garibaldi. He recognized in her at once a well-wisher on whom he could count for valuable service. "You shall come and nurse my soldiers for me in our next fight," he said to her, and she at once prepared herself for the task, setting herself strenuously to the study of medicine and surgery. But it was in the capacity of special correspondent to the Daily News that she eventually came to Italy and met her future husband, Alberto Mario, at Genoa, the hotbed of the revolutionary party. Mario was the scion of a noble but impoverished Ferranese family, and an ardent republican patriot. With him she engaged in a conspiracy, which was discovered. She had just completed a letter to the Daily News when police officers entered her room and arrested her. Mario had only time to post it before sharing her fate. They were imprisoned for four months. On their liberation they both found their way to England, were married in her father's house, and proceeded to America, where they became active propagandists of the cause of Italian freedom.

* * *

Campaigning With Garibaldi.

On the outbreak of the war of independence in 1859 they returned to Italy and joined Garibaldi's camp. Signora Mario took up her journalistic work again, and contributed special correspondence to the Daily News. Knowing her enterprising and eager disposition, the editor sent her a warning note: "Don't get into prison again," he wrote, "because it is very inconvenient for the paper."

With Garibaldi's "red shirts" Signora Jessie White Mario went through the Italian campaign of 1859 and 1860, and saw much of the fighting which brought about the unity of Italy. She had on several occasions to escape from dangerous situations in disguise, and she frequently risked her life by taking the places of others who were being pursued and in imminent peril of capture. Garibaldi spoke of her as the bravest woman of modern times, and Mazzini, Victor Emmanuel and other Italian leaders were warm in their admiration of her.

She refused all rewards for her services with the exception of two gold medals which were struck in her honor by some of the wounded whom she had attended as Inspectress of ambulances, a post conferred upon her on the battlefield by Garibaldi.

* * *

Ended As a School Teacher.

In 1877 she rendered a different kind of service to Italy by her inquiry into the miseries of Neapolitan existence—a piece of work she undertook at the suggestion of that distinguished scholar and Italian Senator, Prof. Pasquale Villari. In the following years she produced a number of other books of great interest and value, including lives of Garibaldi and Mazzini. Her husband died in 1883. Since that time she earned her livelihood chiefly, as already indicated, by her work as a teacher of English in a Florence school—a school of feminine pupil-teachers.

By a noteworthy coincidence her funeral cortege had to pass in front of Casa Guidi, bedecked a few hours earlier with flags and flowers in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of that other English heroine of the struggle for Italian independence, Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

Nature's Laxative the Best.

Many Are So-Called "Natural."

There are many Laxatives on the market that are often styled "Natural" because of the well-known fact that the Laxative which Nature gives us is the best. Such ones are constantly coming up, but soon disappear, because in reality they are manufactured, and can never attain the inimitable merits of the product of Nature. HUNYADI JANOS, the genuine NATURAL Laxative Water, has stood at the head for nearly half a century as the ONLY Laxative whose established reputation is its best recommendation. It remains always the standard because it is NATURE'S remedy in its original form, pure and simple, in no way dependent, as the others are, on artificial composition. At all Druggists. Try it.

LACK OF WATER AIDS FIRE IN MADISON

BLAZE LASTS TWO HOURS AND DOES BIG DAMAGE.

BUSINESS SUSPENDS AS MATTER OF NECESITY.

MAINS WERE OUT OFF ORDER.

Madison, Ind., June 12.—[Special.]—At 2 o'clock this afternoon a fire alarm was sounded from the Sixth ward, or west end of the city, and the department hastened to the scene of the conflagration, which started on Depot street and spread to Main and Wall streets. The residences of Charles Newman, Martin Duffy, Philip Donohue, Miss Gauner, George Knoll and the insurance office of John T. Eitel were soon consumed and numerous sheds and stables on the alley between Main and Third streets were swept away.

The most valuable property destroyed was the large brick residence of Mrs. Sallie Robinson, at the corner of Main and Wall streets, worth $6,000, and on which there was $3,000 insurance.

The wind was blowing high and it was son discovered there was something wrong in the water mains and a resort to buckets was necessitated. When the shortage of water became apparent Fire Chief Hargan and Mayor Cisco ordered all the factories in the city to suspend operations until the fire was subdued. The newspaper offices which are operated by electric power, were compelled to shut down, thus making the papers appear late. Everything possible was done by the Chief and his men to save property, all other considerations being forgotten. At 4 o'clock the fire had burned out and smouldering ruins required the continued throwing of water by the department.

By order of Mayor Cisco and with the consent of Gov. Hanly Capt. Haig's company of local militia will have charge of the burned district to-night to prevent spread of the fire and protect the property from thieves. It was the most destructive fire Madison has had for many years, in the number of buildings destroyed and space covered. The aggregate loss will probably not exceed $12,000, less than one-half insured.

JUVENILE COURT

Organized By County Judge C. A. Wilson.

WILL SIT EVERY FRIDAY TO MAKE INVESTIGATIONS.

SCALPERS ENJOINED FROM SELLING HOME COMING TICKETS.

R. L. PAGE TAKES OATH.

A Juvenile Court for Jefferson county was provided yesterday when Judge Charles A. Wilson announced his appointments of the members of the Board of Visitation and the Probation Officers and administered them the oath of office.

The Board of Visitation consists of Mrs. Patty Semple, Mrs. Daisy F. Schimpeler, Sister Mary Augustine, Mrs. John B. Castleman, Dr. Winifred Greene, Bernard Flexner, Albert S. Brandeis, Dillon Mapother, Enos Spencer and Benjamin F. Washer.

After the oath had been administered the board held a brief meeting at which the board's duties were briefly discussed. The board's temporary organization effected some time ago when Judge Wilson first gave out the list of his appointees was made permanent. Bernard Flexner is chairman, Mrs. Pattie Semple vice chairman and Dr. Winifred Greene secretary. Under the law the board is required to visit several times a year the various institutions in the city where the children are to be received either before investigation or afterward. The court is qualified to dispose of the cases of boys as old as seventeen years and girls eighteen. Judge Wilson said that he had appointed Mrs. Kate G. Hayman Chief Probation Officer and James Ramsey Assistant Probation Officer. Their salaries are $1,200 and $900 respectively.

The Juvenile Court will sit every Friday morning to make its investigations. On that day Judge Wilson will also hear applications for child labor permits.

The Visitation Board announced the following committees:

Committee on Probation Officers — Mr. Albert S. Brandeis, chairman; Sister Mary Augustine, Mrs. Patty B. Semple, Mr. Enos Spencer, Mr. Ben Washer.

Committee on Detention School and Public Institutions—Mrs. Patty B. Semple, chairman; Mr. Dillon Mapother, Mrs. J. B. Castleman, Dr. Winifred Greene, Mr. Ben Washer.

Committee on Negro Race — Mr. Ben Washer, chairman; Mrs. J. B. Castleman, Mrs. Chas. Schimpeler, Mr. Enos Spencer.

Committee on Co-operation—Mrs. J. B. Castleman, chairman; Sister Mary Augustine, Dr. Winifred Greene, Mrs. Chas. Schimpeler, Mr. Albert S. Brandeis.

Committee on Juvenile Courts — Mrs. Chas. Schimpeler, chairman; Mrs. J. B. Castleman, Mr. Albert S. Brandeis.

The chairman, Bernard Flexner, is, ex officio, a member of all the foregoing committees.

Assignment of members of the Board to attend the Juvenile Court: June 15, entire board; June 22-29, Mrs. Schimpeler and Mr. Brandeis; July 6-13, Dr. Greene and Mr. Flexner; July 20-27, Sister Mary Augustine and Mr. Washer; August 3-10, Mrs. Castleman and Mr. Spencer; August 17-24, Dr. Greene and Mr. Mapother; August 31-September 7, Mrs. Castleman and Mr. Flexner; September 14-21, Sister Mary Augustine and Mr. Spencer; September 28-October 5, Mrs. Castleman and Mr. Brandeis; October 12, Mrs. Schimpeler and Mr. Mapother; October 19-26, Mrs. Semple and Mr. Washer.

Ticket Scalpers Enjoined.

An injunction was issued yesterday by Judge Schackelford Miller against ticket scalpers operating in Louisville this week to prevent them from trading in Home-coming tickets. This order was secured by the combined application of all railroads running into Louisville, and applies to the regular local brokers and transients who make it a business to follow large gatherings and buy and sell cheap tickets.

The original suit under which this order was issued was filed against the local scalpers in the summer of 1904 to prevent the scalpers from dealing in cut-rate tickets sold to Louisville on account of the Knights of Pythias conclave. On several other occasions the injunction has been renewed. The railroads attempted to secure a standing order for all cheap tickets, but Judge Miller over a year ago refused this request, holding that a new order had to be secured to apply to each issue of tickets.

Wills Tendered For Probate.

The will of Charlotta Ambron, dated May 25, 1904, was tendered for probate in the County Court yesterday. It provides that her property shall go to Rosa Ambron and Mrs. Mary Seiler, her daughters. Mrs. Seiler is made executrix without bond.

George H. Luckmann, by his will dated April 7, 1906, and offered for probate yesterday, leaves his property to his widow, Anna Luckmann. At her death it will go to their three children equally, Lizzie Klementz, Antoinette Bergmeier and Theresa Hoeher. The widow is made executrix.

R. L. Page Qualifies.

Robert Lee Page yesterday qualified as Assistant County Attorney in accordance with the new law providing for that office and fixing the salary at $2,000 a year. The oath of office was administered in the County Court. Mr. Page has been R. W. Bingham's personal assistant in the office several years.

Paces Injured In Transit.

Norvin T. Harris brought suit yesterday against the Adams Express Company for $1,500 because of injury to his pacing horse, Tiny Bird, while in transit from this city to Johnstown, Pa. The horse sustained a wrecked ankle and was unable to start in several important races.

Court Paragraphs.

—Maggie J. Rudy sued Samuel Wolff and wife for $6,000 damages, charging that they assaulted her.

—John A. Elliott, trustee of the will of Susan J. Elliott, filed suit to secure settlement of his accounts.

—Charles L. Gray sued the Illinois Central Railroad Company for $2,000 damages. His left foot was crushed while in defendant's employ.

—J. H. Leimkuehler sued Callye and George Panke to enforce a lien of $1,410, alleged as a balance due for the erection of a dwelling house for defendants.

—William M. Schindler sued the Hopkins Attraction Company for $2,000 damages because of injury to his wife while she was getting off a scenic railway car.

—Robert G. Gordon sued A. L. Macpherson to enforce a specific performance of an alleged contract to buy a lot for $675 on Harney street near Seventeenth.

—Henry D. Robb sued Henry Bohlsen for $225 which the plaintiff says is due him because of the defendant's alleged failure to comply with a contract for roofing a house.

Court of Appeals Decisions.

John Barry, etc., vs. H. N. Baker.—Filed June 5, 1906.—(Not to be reported.) Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court. Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, reversing.

First—Land—Action for Partition—Necessary Parties—Lien Holders.—In an action for the partition of lands under Section 1 of Section 499, Ky. Civil Code, providing for a division of land held jointly by different parties, it is not necessary to make one who has a mortgage lien on the one-fifth interest of one of the owners a party to such action. When a person takes a lien upon an undivided interest in land he must receive it with the understanding that his lien will follow upon the particular interest whenever placed in the division.

Second—Same—Actions to Enforce Liens—Necessary Parties—Other Lien Holders.—Under Secs. 692 and 694, Ky. Civil Code, providing that the plaintiff in an action to enforce a lien on real property shall state in his petition "the liens which are held by others and make them defendants, and no sale shall be ordered by the court prejudicial to the rights of the holders of any of the liens," it was error in the court to enforce a lien on land held by one party without making the other lien holders parties to such action.

C. T. Baker for appellants; Charles M. F. Striger for appellee.

Louisville Home Telephone Co. vs. John D. Gasper, etc.—Filed June 5, 1906.—(To be reported.)—Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, C. P., Second Division. Opinion of the court by Judge Settle, affirming.

First—Telephone Companies—Negligently Constructing Guy Wire—Dangerous to Vehicles.—A wire three-eighths of an inch thick, running from a point in the ground eighteen inches out in a twenty-foot alley in a city and along a fence so near its color as to render the wire practically undiscernible, may be regarded as an obstruction dangerous to individuals and vehicles passing over or through the alley.

Second — Same—Injury to Person.—A telegraph or telephone company may be held liable for damages to a person injured by its negligence in obstructing a street or highway with its poles or wires.

Third—Same—Overturning Wagon—Negligence of Driver—Original Negligence of Company—Proximate Cause.—Where a telephone company was negligent as to the manner in which its guy wire was anchored at the entrance of an alleyway, opening into a street of a city, so as to constitute a dangerous obstruction to a wagon driven into the alley, and by which such wagon, though carelessly driven, was overturned on and injured one properly using the alley, and which accident would not have happened but for the company's earlier negligence in the construction of its wire, it cannot escape liability for the injury, because its original negligence would be the proximate cause of such injury.

Fourth—Evidence—Injury—Natural Result of Obstruction.—In order to hold the telephone company liable in such case, it was not necessary to show that it could or should have foreseen the result. It was only necessary for the injured party to show that his injury was the natural, though not necessary result of the presence of the obstruction.

Owensboro City Railroad Co. vs. Louisville and Nashville Railroad Co., etc.—Filed June 7, 1906.—(Not to be reported.) Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court. Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, affirming.

First—Contracts—Street Car Lines and Railroad Companies—Right to Cross Each Other's Lines—Compensation.—Under Section 216 of the Constitution, providing that "all railway, transfer belt lines and railway bridge companies shall allow the tracks of each other to unite, intersect and cross any point when such union, intersection and crossing is reasonable or feasible," a street railway line is not authorized to cross a railroad track without making just compensation to such railroad for the right of way, where such crossing is not on a street of a town, city or on a public highway.

Second — Same—Consideration—Validity. —A contract by a street car company with a railroad company, agreeing, for the consideration of permission to cross its railroad track outside of a city or of a public highway crossing, that all of its cars shall be stopped before passing over the crossing, and its motormen, drivers and other employes shall see that the track is clear before crossing it, is based upon a sufficient consideration to uphold the contract, and said street car company is liable for any damage done to the railroad company for its failure to observe its contract.

Third—Evidence—Part of Res Gestae.—Statements made by the motorman and conductor of the street car line to the railroad conductor within three or four minutes after an accident occurred injuring the railroad company is competent evidence as part of the res gestae.

C. W. Wells, Hayes & Johnson for appellant; W. F. Browder, J. C. Browder, Benjamin D. Warfield, R. A. Miller for appellee.

Second National Bank of Richmond, Ind., Vs. George and Thomas Adams—Filed June 5, 1906.—(Not to be reported.) Appeal from Clark Circuit Court. Opinion of the court by Carroll, Commissioner, reversing.

First—Principal and Agent—Selling Wheat-stacker—Authority of Agent—Liability of Principal.—Where it does not appear from the record that an agent who sold an "Uncle Tom's Farmers' Friend Stacker," was a general agent of the company, nor that he had authority from his principal to do more than make contracts in respect to the machinery he sold, any representation he made as to the durability or adaptibility for the work, or as to the material out of which it was made, or as to the services it would render, would be within the scope of his authority and binding upon his principal, but any statement or representations he made concerning the power of the engine or touching any other matter not affecting the fitness, durability or quality of the stacker, were outside the line of his employment and not binding upon his principal.

City of Paducah vs. Cornelia Johnson. Filed May 30, 1906. (Not to be reported). Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court. Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn, affirming.

First—Action Against City—Personal Injuries — Defective Streets — Abutting Precipice—Absence of Barrier—Pleading—Notice.—Where in an action against a city for an injury caused by the falling of the plaintiff's buggy over an unprotected precipice abutting a street, on which she was driving in the night time, where, it is alleged in the petition,, that the city many years prior to her injury had taken charge of and opened the street up to the brink of the precipice, and failed to erect a barrier or guard for the protection of travelers, it was not necessary to aver that the city had notice of the dangerous condition of the street prior to her injury.

Second—Same—Obstruction—Placed by Third Party—Notice Must Be Alleged.—When a city commits an act of negligence or wrong, by reason of which an injury is sustained, it is not necessary to allege in a petition for damages that the city had notice thereof, for it is presumed to have knowledge of its own acts, but when the obstruction is placed upon the street by a third person, it must be alleged that the city had notice thereof, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known it in time to have remedied the defect before the injury occurred.

Third—Instructions to Jury—Dedication of Street.—An instruction to the jury that the city could accept the dedication of a street, either in express terms or by taking control thereof, and permitting the public to use it as one of the streets of the city prior to the time of the injury, was proper.

Fourth—Liability of City—Reasonable Belief of Danger.—The question is, did the governing body of the city, when it omitted to place or cause to be placed a railing or some protection at the brink of this precipice, act with a reasonable belief that it was not necessary or expedient to do so for the protection of the public? If so, the city is not liable; if not, it is liable for the injury.

Fifth — Continuances — Discretion of Court.—A party to an action is not entitled to a continuance as a matter of right when the opposite party files an amended pleading. The question addresses itself to the sound discretion of the court, and unless the trial court abuses that discretion this court will not interfere.

Sixth—Admonition to Jury—Presumption.—It is not reasonable to presume that the jury disobeyed the injunction of the court when told not to consider certain evidence that had been introduced and afterward excluded.

Seventh—Excessive Verdict.—A verdict against a city of $4,000 for injuries resulting in the breaking of one of the bones of the leg near the ankle and the dislocation of the other bone at the ankle, the fracture of the right hin and the breaking of the pelvic bone, is not excessive, the injuries being pronounced permanent by the attending physicians and surgeons.

POLICE ON LOOKOUT.

WATCH FOR SUSPICIOUS MEN IN BIG CROWDS.

More Than a Dozen Arrested As Suspected Felons—Depots All Guarded.

"The city is just as quiet as it can be," said Maj. Patrick Ridge, Night Chief of Police, who is in charge of the police department during the illness of Col. Sebastian Gunther. The department, he said, has been instructed to keep its eyes open for suspicious characters, as bunco men and pickpockets usually pour into a city where any large celebration is going on, or where there are a large number of visitors. The result of this order is the rounding-up as suspicious felons, of over a dozen men yesterday.

They are all visitors to the city, few giving their residence as Louisville. Maj. Ridge said that detectives are guarding the depots and other places where crowds are gathered.

"The police will be busy to-day looking after the crowds of people along the route of the parade, and will not be able to watch the streets for suspicious characters as closely as usual. If the people would only be more careful themselves," said Maj. Ridge, "there would not be as much danger of being robbed."

One of the men arrested as suspicious characters, was Harvey Williams, who, the police believe, is a well-known bunco man. He was arrested at the Seventh-street station by Detectives Donahue and Ross yesterday morning. He claims to be an employe of Robinson Bros. circus.

CHARGED WITH SENDING OBSCENE LETTER BY MAIL.

David Lambert Arrested By Government Officers.

David Lambert, of 819 West Chestnut street was arrested yesterday by William Blades, Deputy United States Marshal, on the charge of sending obscene matter through the mails. It is alleged that he wrote such a letter to his wife, Mrs. Minnie Lambert, from whom he had been divorced. The matter was taken before M. H. Thatcher, Assistant District Attorney, who ordered a warrant to be issued for the arrest of Lambert, after he had examined the case. Lambert waived a preliminary examination yesterday and in default of his bond of $750, he was committed to the county jail.

GREAT PROGRESS IN SHOE TRADE

INDUSTRY IN LOUISVILLE SHOWS GREAT ADVANCE.

JOBBERS AND MANUFACTURERS HAVE GOOD SEASON.

CITY A BIG SHOE CENTER.

The importance of Louisville as a shoe market has been demonstrated to a greater degree during the last few months than ever before. The volume of the spring trade, the quality of the goods bought and the constantly increasing number of Southern and Southwestern merchants who are buying all or nearly all of their footwear here all point to Louisville's importance in this branch of manufacturing. Many merchants who formerly bought this class of merchandise in Cincinnati and St. Louis, now come to this city. The character of the footwear bought also proves that the manufacturers here are able to compete with the makers of the most stylish and high-priced goods. The equipment of the manufacturers as well as the facilities of the jobbers, afford Louisville every opportunity of becoming one of the foremost shoe centers of the country.

No one in the city is brought in closer contact with the merchants who come to this market to buy shoes than John J. Telford, secretary of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association. In consequence he can speak with knowledge and authority of the subject. Yesterday he said:

Probably no line of business in this city during the past year shows such marked progress and general improvement as the wholesale boot and shoe trade. This appears not only from the railway tonnage reports, and the increasingly large sales made to out-of-town buyers, but is especially noticeable from the number of inquiries made for goods of Louisville make.

The jobbing interests have done an exceedingly heavy business during the past season, in fact the heaviest business in their history. They have been able to show large and varied assortments of goods, up-to-date in every particular, and no market in the country can compete with them in prices with any show of success. The reason for this is that they especially cater to, and thoroughly understand, the Southern and Southwestern trade, and the dealers of no other city takes the same pains to give their customers exactly what they want.

In addition to the jobbing men, most of whom own and operate their own factories, there are several large boot and shoe factories and very many smaller ones that make special lines of goods suitable to the markets in which they trade.

Louisville is getting to be a better boot and shoe market every year, and shows conclusively what enterprise, ambition and capital can accomplish in the hands of the gentlemen who are at the head of the large boot and shoe establishments in this city.

Married Women

Every woman covets a shapely, pretty figure, and many of them deplore the loss of their girlish forms after marriage. The bearing of children is often destructive to the mother's shapeliness. All of this can be avoided, however, by the use of Mother's Friend before baby comes, as this great liniment always prepares the body for the strain upon it, and preserves the symmetry of her form. Mother's Friend overcomes all the danger of child-birth, and carries the expectant mother safely through this critical period without pain. It is woman's greatest blessing. Thousands gratefully tell of the benefit and relief derived from the use of this wonderful remedy. Sold by all druggists at $1.00 per bottle. Our little book, telling all about this liniment, will be sent free.

HEAD HUNTING

Described By One Who Actually Saw It.

IGORROTE EXPEDITION ON TRAIL OF HUMANS.

DOG MEAT NOT BAD EATING.

C. S. Bateman, residing at 900 Temple street, is one of a very few who have seen an Igorrote head-hunting expedition in full swing, says a Los Angeles special to the Chicago Record-Herald. In this connection a peculiar coincidence occurred the other day at the local Igorrote Indian village. While there Bateman recognized in the head chief, Domingo, an ally who had assisted him, while sergeant of Company G, Thirty-third United States Volunteers, in suppressing the Igorrote head-hunting forays in the Bontoc district of Luzon, Philippine Islands.

Old Domingo was sitting at the native forge making battle-axes when Sergeant Bateman happened along. As the chief looked up he met the gaze of the sergeant and immediately there was mutual recognition. Domingo dropped his work, and in a series of guttural monosyllables informed the sergeant that he recognized him after a long separation. Immediately the remainder of the tribe was called, and many of them recognized Mr. Bateman as the sergeant who had led a detachment against their old-time enemies, the Igorrotes of Tulubin, a district bordering that of Bontoc.

That was six years ago, and the Tulubin Igorrotes had been making serious inroads upon the Bontoc tribes with their head-hunting expeditions. Old Domingo was head chief of the Bontoc tribes, and was friendly to the United States, being one of the first chiefs to recognize the sovereignty of this country. His tribe was peaceable and industrious, but the Tulubins needed heads to adorn their fence posts and found good hunting in Domingo's rice fields.

The matter was reported to Colonel Hare of the Thirty-ninth Regiment, and he detached Sergeant Bateman and placed him at the head of a squad of United States infantry and ordered him to go into Tulubin and make the Igorrotes be good. To this detachment Domingo and his subchiefs contributed 600 Igorrote soldiers, the old chief taking command of the squad.

Then came days of long, hard marching over swollen rivers, mountains and through dense undergrowth. The Igorrotes, who are marvels of endurance, carried the commissary on their backs and when rivers were encountered that were too deep to ford they built foot-bridges and assisted their white allies to cross. When a soldier fell from exhaustion he was taken up and conveyed on the backs of the sturdy brown savages to a safe retreat, while the army pressed forward to the Tulubin country.

* * *

Finally one day the scouts reported the Tulubins near by and Sergeant Bateman arrayed his mixed army for battle. In speaking of the first brush with the head-hunters he gives the following story:

"We threw out a skirmish line and the soldiers took a few pot shots at the Tulubins, and then I decided to turn the fracas over to old Domingo and his warriors. This old chief is a wily chap and a bad actor, and has a great record as a warrior, having, it is said, taken seventeen heads. The infantrymen sat on the mountainside and watched the Igorrotes go for one another, and it was a sight to behold.

"They charged one another with head-ax and spear, using both with equal skill and ferocity. Domingo was in the thick of the fighting all the time, and wielded his head-ax with marvelous skill, and I think took the first head. He dropped his antagonist with a blow and with another from his keen-edged ax severed the head from the body. I saw him pick it up and rub the bloody stump of the neck over his face and breast.

"It was a grewsome sight. But this rubbing of the head on the body is considered essential to good luck in battle. On all sides savages were falling, and in each instance they stopped to repeat the performance of Domingo. The battle was waged with increasing energy until both sides appeared to tire and become exhausted, when it ended by mutual consent.

"Having satisfied ourselves that the Tulubins had received a good drubbing at the hands of Domingo and his warriors and that they would be good in future, we returned to Bontoc.

"In all, Domingo's band had captured about a dozen heads, which they bore home in the head basket suspended on their backs. There was a great celebration in Bontoc, and for about a month every A-to in the district resounded with rejoicing night and day. There were all kinds of native ceremonies and festivities—numerous pigs, carabao and dogs were slaughtered and a continual round of feasting ensued.

"Oh, yes, we had to show the Igorrotes that we were good fellows, and nearly every one of the soldiers ate a little of the dog meat. Poor food? Not a bit of it. It wasn't half bad, and there was many a soldier in Bontoc that ate dog and was glad to get it, because it beat canned roast beef a mile.

"The dog plays an important part with the Igorrote. He is believed to possess a good spirit, and is held in great respect by the native, but as he grows old he is slaughtered and eaten that the good spirit may enter the body of the Igorrote and there dwell in harmony with other spirits that have gone before.

"They also believe in a supreme being and have no idols, but offer sacrifices to propitiate the deity. Their head-hunting is also considered a perfectly proper act, and if one of a tribe lose his head his fellows believe that a head must be taken in return. These heads are believed to keep away evil spirits and bring good luck and are not kept as a reminder of vengeance wreaked on an offending tribesman."

During the afternoon Sergeant Bateman was the guest of Domingo at his A-to, and the two talked over their experiences as soldiers and the dangers encountered in the wilds of the Philippines.

On several occasions the Igorrotes have given presents to the sergeant and his wife and he also received a letter, written for the Igorrotes by an interpreter, detailing their gratitude for his assistance in ridding them of their enemies.

* * *

The Igorrote has a keen sense of humor. In fact, he is entirely different from all other aboriginal tribes, and likes a joke as well as anyone. In the village is another savage who has a record of thirteen heads. He is not considered much in the way of a warrior, and Chief Moline, who is the happiest spirit in the village, gives a version of how the savage came to have these heads to his credit. Through an interpreter he gave the following interview:

"Don't think much of him as head hunter. Spaniards used to go swimming along river close Bontoc. He hide in brush close to clothes. Spaniard come out, he hit him with battle-ax, chop off head, come home say he great warrior. Not much good."

EX-SENATOR LINDSAY GETS STAY IN PATRICK CASE.

Supreme Court To Hear Appeal In October.

Canton, O., June 12.—Application was made to Justice Day, of the United States Supreme Court, this afternoon by Attorney William Lindsay, for a stay writ of appeal and consequently a stay of execution in behalf of Lawyer Albert T. Patrick, of New York. Justice Day, after hearing the reasons of Patrick's counsel, decided the case appealable and granted a writ to that effect. It will be heard by the Supreme Court in October. The action was brought before Justice Day because Chief Justice Fuller and other members of the Supreme Court are widely scattered on their vacation trips, and it was most convenient to reach him.

The Kansas City Times says: "At a meeting of the Business Men's League last night it was decided that steps should be taken to form an association to be called the Missouri River Improvement Association, to promote river improvements. The league also asked the City Council not to grant any river front rights without first consulting the different commercial organizations of the city. After careful consideration it was decided at a meeting of the directors of the Commercial Club yesterday to try and perfect the formation of a bureau to have charge of the improvements of the Missouri river necessary for navigation, and it is expected to include all the towns and cities along the river. It was also recommended that the Commercial Club and all other industrial organizations in the city should become members of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress. After several weeks of consideration the Transportation Committee arrived at the conclusion that a company with a capital exceeding $250,000 should be organized to build and operate boats and barges between St. Louis and Kansas City, and will so recommend at the meeting of the club to-night."....A correspondent wants to know where is the S. Watkins makes its initial trip down the picturesque Illinois river, its chief officer and navigator will carry the first full master and pilot's certificate ever issued by the Chicago steamboat inspectors to a woman. She was a school teacher, a fireman and an engineer. Now she is captain....The Ironton, O., correspondent of the Waterways Journal says: "Saturday evening seven hundred quarts of nitroglycerin passed down for Maysville, where it will be used in shooting oil wells. The explosive was in a large flat boat steered by one man. Most of the steamboats are wary of this material and take a wide circuit on a slow bell when they see it coming. The boat carried a red flag to denote danger, and this, with the thought of the responsibility of its letting go, is generally awe-inspiring to those who stand on the bank and watch it go by. The nitroglycerin boat was only traveling about three hours each day and has been three days coming from Gallipolis to this point. The boat left Marietta for Maysville early last week."....The safe in the office of the Kentucky was robbed at Paducah several days ago of $7....Big crowds of women are coming here on the packets to "attend the meetin'."....The Columbia made an excursion trip up the river and back yesterday....The W. W. O'Neil and tow arrived from New Orleans yesterday. She tied up here for a rest....Several coal barons from Pittsburg are due to arrive today.

WHAT DOES "HOME COMING" MEAN TO YOU?

We are not referring to this grand Home-Coming celebration, but are speaking of every day. When your work is done, do you go "home" to a rented house?

DO YOU CALL A RENTED HOUSE "HOME?"

Whose "Home" will it be if your landlord finds someone who will pay more rent than you can? What have you got to show for all the money you have paid out in rent except a lot of worthless rent receipts? Why do you continue to pay rent when you can own your home and pay for it the same as rent? Don't you know that under the ORIGINAL plan of the STANDARD REAL ESTATE LOAN CO. of WASHINGTON, D. C., you can own your home and pay for it like rent? We issue a "home purchasing investment contract" under which you are enabled to obtain a loan for the purpose of buying or building a home and paying for it like rent. We do not seek to make you believe we are offering something for nothing. But we are accumulating money and lending same to our contract holders on a basis of 5 per cent. per annum, allowing the borrower to repay in monthly installments. We have already purchased over $168,000 worth of homes for our contract holders and are purchasing more each month. We court the strictest investigation, and as to our standing refer you to the commercial agencies and to the many who have purchased homes through us. Our representatives will be glad to explain our proposition to you fully.

Genuine Bourbon Whisky

For the Home-Comers.

Nothing will be so attractive and inviting to many of them as 15-year-old whisky, put up in cases and demijohns by W. H. Thomas & Son Company. We have commenced to-day to make preparations to pay the tax on several hundred barrels, putting same up in cases and demijohns, where shrinkage stops, and the whisky is preserved in all of its original purity. Citizens of this State agree with us that when our supply is exhausted no more 15 to 17-year-old Kentucky Bourbon can be had; and in order to have it on hand we are ready to make contracts to deliver same in 5 case lots and over at $12 per case or $4 per proof gallon, in bulk; closing such sales with negotiable paper at four, five and six months. Our stock consists of Boone's Knoll, Astor, Saffell, Walker, Nutwood, Old Mock, Ripy, Bond, Old Jordan, D. L. Moore and Mellwood.

KING ATTENDS DINNER FOR MR. AND MRS. LONGWORTH.

Shows Them Marked Attention—Ambassador Reid and Mrs. Reid Entertain.

London, June 12.—Seldom has the entertainment of the representative of any foreign Government attracted the attention of the social, diplomatic and political world that did the dinner and reception given by Ambassador and Mrs. Reid at Dorchester House this evening, for Representative and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, and at which King Edward, by his presence and attention to President Roosevelt's daughter, marked his esteem for the United States and the Chief Executive.

Flowers of every variety, cut and potted, were used in profusion in banking the basis of the massive columns and railings of the grand staircase. Red and pink roses and scarlet ramblers, now so much in vogue in interior decoration, predominated, but were placed tastefully amid bowers of ferns and clusters of Marguerites, carnations and other favorites of English horticulturists. Over the main entrance which overlooks the Stanhope gate entrance of Hyde Park from Park Lane, a marble eagle looked down upon the arriving guests, who, on entering, passed to the head of the stairway, where they were received by Mr. and Mrs. Reid and presented in turn to King Edward and Mr. and Mrs. Longworth.

Dinner was served in the main dining hall which contains many valued paintings. The table, however, stood out even amidst this grandeur with its simple but artistic arrangement of Alexander and other varieties of orchids. King Edward took out Mrs. Reid and at the King's desire Mrs. Longworth was seated at the other side of him, thus taking precedence of the Duchesses. Ambassador Reid escorted the Duchess of Marlborough with the Duchess of Buccleuch on his left. There was less formality than at purely English functions attended by the King, who was technically for the time on American soil. During the dinner Herr Gottlieb's orchestra played.

Fifth Race—Bud Hill, Yowric, Friction.
Sixth Race—Harding, Clifton Forge, Matador.
Seventh Race—Red Light, Intense, Golden Mineral.

LATONIA, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The menu offered this afternoon was the means of bringing to the course a banner half holiday crowd. The card fairly teemed with equine good things, the chief headliner of which was the running of the Harold Stakes, which is for two-year-old colts at five furlongs, and was won after a most sensational drive by Holdfast, C. L. Railey's $25,000 beauty, which has been knocking at the door for some time, and which broke his maidenhood with this effort.

Three owners thought they saw a soft spot in to-day's stake, and entered as many candidates. These were Harold D., which finished second to the Railey trick; Navarro, with which the Baldwin connections attempted a killing the other day, and aSndcatcher. The latter two were never prominent in the running.

Rough riding characterized the running of the race almost from flagfall to wire, and in the run home Zal, William Gerst's hitherto unbeaten youngster and a prohibitive favorite in the betting, engaged in a roughing match with Overlando, a supposed real good thing, and in the ensuing scuffle Holdfast slipped up on the outside, winning, while the latter pair failed to finish inside the money. For the rough tactics the judges had Jockey Obert, who had the leg up on Zal, on the carpet, and after a seevre reprimand fined him $50 and placed him on the groundfo r ten days.

Just prior to the running of the first race to-day the stewards handed down a ruling which ruled off the turf Bookmaker C. M. Vignes, who had been on the block here in partnership with O. F. Humes since the meeting started, doing business as the Columbia book. After the sheets had been made up after Saturday's business, several hundred dollars of marker bets were made up in envelopes, to be paid out as usual on Monday. Vignes had these in charge and, it is alleged, left with them to parts unknown. When the tickets were presented to Ring Manager Gene Elrod, he informed Judge Price, and the latter official took immediate action, the consequence being that the bookmaker was ruled off the turf, the officials taking Section 98 of the rules which govern the case and defaulting bookmakers, and under which Plunger John J. Ryan was ruled off last summer.

In the day's opener Black Enamel furnished a few stunts not down on the card by cavorting about and finally dumping Jockey Perrett over the fence, winding up his ramblings over amongst the kitchens, where, after a general round-up had been arranged, he was finally corralled. Starter Holtman got the bunch of twelve off to an excellent break. Miss Bertha, about which the books took the liberties of laying 3s, was first to show, and under a hustling ride at the hands of Troxler, she flashed into a long lead rounding the far turn, and, although shaken up a bit entering the final furlong, when King Leopold made his challenge, won with plenty in reserve. King Leopold, which opened favorite, but which went to the post a lukewarm second choice, was an easy second. Edith M. had to be ridden out to the last ounce to annex the short end.

B. F. Guthrie's Usury cleverly outfooted the field which opposed her in the second, which was at seven furlongs. With Capitano and Harding out of the way by the scratch route, the books made Wexford, which won his last out very impressively from a more than ordinary field, a 7 to 10 favorite, but those speculatively inclined did not seem to want the Woolsthorpe gelding to-day, and his price gradually soared to even money, with few takers. Austin got the favorite off well in motion, but in the race for positions the favorite was jammed back, and, although hard ridden all the way, did not seem to regain his stride until the race was practically over, when he closed with a rush, finishing a bang-up fourth. The winner had the foot of the party, and smothered her field with speed, opened up a winning lead going down the back stretch, and won, with lots in reserve, by a length and a half from Carew. The latter was well supported out on the limb, and, in company with Tom Crowe, proved the runner-up for the entire distance. Carew annexed the short end in the last jump. Tom Crowe seemed to hang in the last couple of strides, when the extreme pressure was put on.

The third, which was in the nature of an added attraction and vied with the chief headliner on the card for a place of prominence, brought together a clever bunch of the handicap division in which the work of the handicapper stood out very prominently. Although she was conceding lumps of weight to everything in the race with the possible exception of John Carroll, the books made Dutch Barbara a pronounced favorite over her field, and opening at 2 to 1 the price was quickly hammered down to 9 to 5 in the twinkling of an eye. Maj. T. J. Carson, which dropped into the two-hole, was next best thought of, his opening price of 4s being forced to 14 to 5 by a real smart coterie. With the exception of a few sharpshooters taking a shy at the Millett trick, Helena C., the balance went unbacked. John Carroll was well thought of before he warmed up, but after the Ornament horse breezed through the stretch displaying unmistakable evidence of soreness, it was a case of write your own ticket with no takers. When the start came Helena C. flattered her backers by immediately taking the track and opening up a lead of a length on Terns Rod, which was the runner up in the early stages, seemed to be well within herself until rounding the far turn, where Dutch Barbara closed with a rattle, and when collared the Millett filly chucked it up badly, falling back beaten. Terns Rod continued to force the pace with the Flying Dutchman filly, simply breezing out in front. Entering the final furlong Maj. T. J. Carson, which had been under restraint during the early stages, closed with a belated rattle, and although responding to punishment gamely, was not quite good enough, being three lengths back of Dutch Barbara at the finish, while Terns Rod hung on long enough to get the short end.

C. L. Railey's $25,000 beauty Hodfast, after knocking at the dor for some time, finally came into his own by annexing the long end of the plum in to-day's feature. The Harold Stakes, which was worth $1,905 to the Lexington owner of the colt. Notwithstanding the fact that rough riding characterized the running of this classic almost from flag fall to wire, and with this eliminated the result might have been different. It must nevertheless be admitted that the victory of Holdfast was a most impressive one, and the contest spectacular in the extreme, the finish bringing five horses abreast, entering the final furlong a bitter and gruelling drive ensuing between them from there to the wire. In the betting the hitherto unbeaten Zal, from the barn of William Gerst, was a most prohibitive odds-on favorite, and, although his price soared as high as 7 to 10 at one time, there was very little of it, and was probably posted in the nature of a feeler. Antrim at 5s, Holdfast at 8s, Harold D., Navarro and Sancatcher the added starters, were all was as good as 20, while Ovelando, the only other starter, was freely quoted at 9 to 2. A real smart play was noted about the winner, which took on the nature of a smart set, but the bulk of the play was bentered about Zal, even though at post time 1 to 2 was the very best obtainable. When the start came Antrim, a very fast breaker, was first to show, attended by the favorite with Ovelando at their throatlatches. Rounding the far turn, Oevlando had forged to the front and opened up a gap of one length on Zal, which was submitting to restraint very kindly. Turning into the home stretch a new contender loomed up in Holdfast, and while Ovelando and Zal were engaged in a battle royal of a bumping match, slipped up on the outside, and, standing a gruelling drive with sparkling gameness, forged to the front, winning with something in reserve by one length. Harold D., which had ben badly outrun in the early stages, closed strong in the run home, and, in a whirlwind finish, annexed the place by a neck from Ovelando, which was a head in front of Zal. Had the roughing been eliminated Zal, to say the least, would have ben a more serious contender, furthermore, Ovelando, which was put on the fence by Obert on the favorite, was full of run when the interference came, and would also have been right there knocking at the door, as this colt came on again when Zal was knocked off of him and was going away at the finish. The judges saw the roughing at the hands of Obert and fined him $50, and in addition placed him on the ground for ten days.

The fifth brought together a very ordinary lot of platers, of which Hector was made and looked to be a legit'mate even-money favorite. But this evidently was not Hector's day, for, although breaking well in motion and flashing into the lead when the start came, stopped as if shot after going half a mile, and chucked the issue up badly, dropped back into the ruck, and was never a factor thereafter. When the latter dropped out of the running Oasis, which had been the runner-up, assumed command, attended by Minnehaha, which has been a most consistent performer at the meeting. Turning for home, the "Indian horse" took up the running, and, flashing into the lead, won without being extended by five lengths from Oasis, which hung on, and got the place from Lizzie McLean, which came from nowhere in the stretch.

The sixth, which brought together sixteen three-year-olds of questionable caliber, saw one of those real old-fashioned hog killings fall by the wayside. Toppy Girl, which had been reported to have worked great guns in early morning trials, was the trick which was supposed to be the real jam. In view of the fact that she had never started hereabouts, the books laid the long, juicy price of 30 to 1 as an opener on the good thing, but Toppy Girl was on the lips of everyone that wanted to wager, and the odds about her soon were cut to 25, then to 20, and finally the money kept coming so that 16 to 1 was the best point obtainable at post call. The way the race was run proved the wise bunch had the correct dope, but that the mare was a trifle short was demonstrated by the running, for, after setting a sizzling pace, spreadeagling her field at all stages and entering the stretch with an advantage of four lengths, looked to be able to walk home and win, but in the final furlong the good thing tired very badly, and, curling up when the pinche came, was very lucky to save the short end, where she finished, from Alma Garda, which closed with a rattle. The race went to another despised outsider, The Mate, which had been played several times for a good thing. To-day the Baker trick was practically neglected, and he ran the best race of his career, winning in a gruelling drive by a neck from Interlight, another hard-luck horse.

The winner was best, broke well in motion and, assuming immediate command, was never in danger. King Leopold met slight interference rounding the first turn, but did not affect the result; was easily second best. Edith M. closed stoutly under an indifferent ride. Merry Patriot shows improvement. Fullman did not run to his best form. Black Enamel ran away a half mile while at the post; broke badly when the start came and was given an easy ride.

240—SECOND RACE—Seven furlongs; purse $400; for three-year-olds and upward; selling. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Winner, B. F. Guthrie's b. f., 3, by Knight of the Thistle—Interest; trained by A. M. House. Value to winner, $300. Fractional time: :25, :50, 1:15 1-5, 1:28 3-5.

The winner was best; under keen restraint the first part she took command when her rider was ready and, racing Helena C. and Tern's Rod into submission, won with plenty in reserve. Maj. T. J. Carson moved up strong rounding the far turn, but was not good enough to beat the winner. Tern's Rod ran in improved form, being the runner-up nearly all the way. Helena C. quit all over when collared. Coruscate closed strong under weak handling. John Carroll was sore going to the post.

The winner ran all around his field rounding the far turn and, closing fast under punishment, won with something in reserve. Harold D., badly outrun in the early stages, closed stoutly, nipping Overlando in the final stride. The latter and Zal engaged in a bumping match all through the final furlong, but for which this one might have won. Zal, slovenly ridden, hung on gamely after the bumping match. Antrim had no apparent excuses.

243—FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs; purse $400; for three-year-olds; selling. Start fair. Won easily; place same. Winner, W. H. Robinson's ch. f., 3, Jack Point—Aminta. Trained by owner. Time, :24 2-5, :49 3-5, 1:15.

Minnehaha ran to her best form, assuming command when her rider was ready, winning with lots in reserve. Oasis, the runner up, forced the pace but tired when the real racing began. Lizzie McLean came from a long way back in the stretch, finishing resolutely. Hector stopped; can do much beter. Adesso was badly messed about.

The Mate followed the early pace closely and, saving ground turning for home, closed with a well-timed rush, and outgamed Interlight when the pinch came. The latter was much the best, and if better handled would have won. Toppy Girl showed a high order of speed for five furlongs; was heavily supported, and stopped as if short. Alma Gadia, poorly ridden, came all around her field turning for home; better handled would have been a serious contender. Ben Shaw can do better.

245—SEVENTH RACE—One and one-half miles; purse $400; for three-year-olds and upward; selling. Start good. Won easily; place same. Winner, G. H. Marbrean's b. c., 4, by Sabine or Falsetto—Alveritas. Value to winner, $300. Fractional time: :25 1-5, :50 2-5, 1:16 1-5, 1:43, 2:10 2-5, 2:36.

Double ran to his best form and, assuming command after going a mile, held others safe in final drive, and won with plenty in reserve. Swiftwing came from a long way back in final drive, but was not good enough to beat winner. Little Elkin, poorly ridden, had scant chance, and finished gamely on his own courage. Eclectic had no excuses and about ran his race. Brigand tired badly after going a mile. Maraschino was eased up after going three quarters.

ANNULLED THEIR CONTRACT,

So Messrs. Gayle and Craine Want Damages.

Owenton, Ky., June 12.—Two large damage suits were filed in the Owen Circuit Court to-day. Messrs. G. D. Craine and James Gayle instituted suit against the Security Mutual Life Insurance Company for $100,000 damages, occasioned them, they declare, by the company breaking its contract with them. They say they were general agents for the company with a favorable contract and were enjoying large commissions when the company without notice revoked their contract and annulled its provisions. They claim they were damaged in the above sum.

George B. Thornton filed suit against John Layle, a rich and prosperous farmer, asking for judgment for $10,000. Thornton was engaged by Layle to milk his cows and was severely gored by one of them. He claims the cow was vicious and dangerous and that Layle was aware of that fact and did not warn him. The cases will come up for trial in Judge Lassing's court, which convenes here in two weeks.

Detroit 8, Philadelphia 7.

Detroit, June 12.—After each team had twice tossed away the game by mixing costly errors with bunched hitting by its opponent, Detroit won in the ninth on Jones' single and steal. Lindsay's base hit and Crawford's fly to center. The game was as exciting as it was erratic. Score:

CHAT OF THE GAME.

GRAND work.
NINTH inning raly.
GAME called at 4 o'clock to-day.
THE Colonels are anything but quitters.
KENNA will pitch the first game against Kansas City.
THE first of a series of four games with Kansas City will be played to-day.
THAT ninth inning finish yesterday made the spectators leave Eclipse Park in good humor.
STOVALL and Brashear figured prominently in the Colonels winning out yesterday in a game which seemed almost hopelessly lost. Quinlan, Dunkle and Hallman also aided.
THE race in the American Association each day becomes closer and prettier, with the first five clubs all fighting hard for the lead. Watch the Colonels is becoming the word passed around the circuit now.
OWNER Tebeau said after the game yesterday that he did not care to disappoint his patrons by stopping the game at a time when the Minneapolis Club wanted to do so, as the visitors did not have to catch the particular train they were desirous of taking.
THE Colonels' star trio of outfielders had a busy day, dividing no less than ten chances among them, which they accepted without a wobble.
THE last time Dunkle and Ford opposed each other a pitchers' battle resulted, and the same proved to be the case yesterday, with the local man having a shade the best of it.
JESSE STOVALL carried off the batting honors yesterday, with three nice safe drives to his credit, two of which figured in the run-getting. It made him feel good to do this against his former team mates.
WHEN a club wins eleven out of fourteen games the other teams had better watch out. No wonder the Colonels are being talked of now as possible pennant-winners.
THE present series of four games between Louisville and Kansas City at Eclipse Park promises to be one of the warmest ones of the season, as George Tebeau, who is the principal owner of both clubs, has offered a prize of $500 to the team that wins the most games from the other this season.
SWANN, the Blues' star southpaw pitcher, who has been pitching the most consistent ball of any left-hander in the Association, will be pitted against the Colonels this afternoon. With Kenna as his opponent, there should be another pitchers' battle.
JIMMY BURKE has infused a lot of ginger into the Blues this season, and the clubs that beat Kansas City out in the race for the flag will have to hustle to do so.

$3.45 ROUND TRIP TO LATONIA, KY.

On June 16, 17 and 18 the Louisville and Nashville R. R. will sell round-trip tickets to Latonia at above rate. Limit returning July 23. On June 16 the 8:30 a. m. train from Union Station, Tenth and Broadway, will stop at Latonia race track.

COLONELS WIN IN LAST INNING

BRASHEAR'S HIT DOES WORK.

FINISH IS VERY EXCITING.

A NINTH-INNING finish, with all the thrills which go with it when the home team pulls a victory out of the fire, was experienced at Eclipse Park yesterday afternoon, when a big crowd of women and a considerable number of men saw the Colonels take the fourth game of the series from the Millers by the score of 3 to 2.

Yesterday's ball game was one of the best played at Eclipse Park this season, and it had in it about everything that the most ardent rooter could desire. It was a pitchers' battle until the last inning, and then Tebeau's men fell upon Pitcher Ford's curves and did what was necessary to win the game by the narrowest of margins. As a matter of fact, when the Colonels got started in the ninth inning it appeared to the spectators as if they had only been fooling all along, but close students of the game knew better than this, because every man on the Louisville team did his utmost to win, and their efforts were crowned with success only in the last period of play.

Big Ed Dunkle, who has been ill, and Ford, the tall star twirler of the Millers, were the opposing pitchers, and each did the best that he knew how. In the second inning, after Graham had gone out, singles by Oyler and Shannon and Davis' two-bagger to right field gave the visitors two scores, all they made during the contest. This looked like an insignificant lead, but it developed that the two scores were a good deal. In the third inning Quinlan drew a base on balls and Dunkle flied out to Hart. Hallman hit a grounder to Oyler, who threw Quinlan out at second, and though Hallman stole second and Stovall followed with a single and also stole second Brashear's grounder to Oyler retired the side with only one Louisville run having crossed the plate. In the last half Gremminger and Graham each lined out a single, but neither was able to score, and in the fourth, after Sullivan had struck out Danny Kerwin hit to right center for three bases, but neither Woodruff nor Shaw was able to bring him home.

It was this way all through the game up to the ninth inning. In almost every inning each side had at least one man on the bases with the chance to win the game beyond the question of a doubt, but Dunkle and Ford were especially effective with men on the sacks and the looked-for runs did not materialize.

In the ninth inning, however, it happened. Larry Quinlan, the first Colonel up, hit a pretty single to center field. Dunkle attempted to sacrifice him to second and Quinlan was thrown out, Ford to Oyler. Billy Hallman laced out a single to left, and when Stovall lined a safety into right Dunkle came home with the tieing score. Stovall tried to stretch his single into a two-bagger and was thrown out at second, which made two out. It was then Roy Brashear's time. If there is a man in the American Association who can be depended upon to make a hit when it is needed that man is Brashear. On the second ball pitched he hit a line drive between left and center for two bases, and Hallman came home with what proved to be the winning run.

The visitors, however, made a game stand in their half of the ninth and almost pulled the victory out of the fire. Gehring was put in to bat for Ford and he struck out. Davis hit a hard grounder to Quinlan, who threw wide to first and the runner was safe. Then Freeman singled to right and Davis went to third, and when Freeman stole second there was a man on third and one on second and only one out and a hit would win the game. Jimmy Hart hit a short fly to left field, which Hallman caught and prevented Davis from scoring. Dunkle then struck out Gremminger, which ended one of the closest games seen here in a long time.

Both sides played brilliantly in the field, and the hitting was sharp enough to make the game spirited. The chief charm of the contest, however, lay in its closeness, and the fact that either side was liable to win the game at any part of the battle. Stovall led with the stick, drawing three singles. Statistics.

"You know, there's a holdup in Chicago every six hours," pleasantly remarked the footpad.

OUTSIDER WINS THE STANDARD

MARE HAS FOOT OF THE PARTY

Reported In East That Whitney's Champion Burgomaster Has Broken Down.

THREE FAVORITES ARE FIRST.

NEW YORK, June 12.—Whimsical, ridden by L. Williams, and running a good race, won the Standard Stakes at one mile and a quarter at Gravesend to-day, defeating Cairngorm and Ormondale. The race was run in the fast time of 2:05 4-5, within two-fifths of a second of the track record. Ormondale, on account of his victory over Whimsical on Saturday, when he gave her fifteen pounds, was made an odds on favorite at 13 to 20, while the price on the mare was 9 to 2 and Cairngorm 16 to 5. To-day they met under scale weight and at no time did Ormondale have the foot of the mare.

It was reported to-day that Burgomaster, Harry Payne Whitney's champion three-year-old, had broken down and would be retired. Three favorites won. Summaries:

FLAT OCCUPANTS MUST WEAR RUBBER HEELS.

"All hail to the discoverer of peace and joy" sing the vast army of people in Washington who live in apartment houses, concerning the landlord, who has ruled that all his tenants must wear rubber heels, says the Washington Post.

The innovation is to secure some degree of quiet in the closely crowded apartment houses, and the heels are furnished by the landlord. It is a clause of the lease that all tenants must wear rubber heels, and the flats are but rarely vacated, and then are greedily snapped up again.

Very few people protest against the plan, and when one of them does, he is politely and firmly informed that there are enough people waiting for the flat to fill the whole apartment house, and he generally subsides.

Each member of the family must be equipped with the little sound-destroyers and must wear no shoes in the flat which are not so protected. The practical working of the scheme is to have each tenant go to a near-by shoemaker, who has a contract with the landlord, and have his shoes fitted out with rubber heels. The bills are sent to the landlord.

"My flats are never empty," says the landlord, "and it doesn't cost very much to keep my tenants in rubber heels."

The metal ceilings, which were hailed several years ago as a final solution of the trouble, have proved only a partial success; and the "racket in the flat upstairs" still kept nerves and temper upset. If the "rubber-heel" system can be made general, there will be even more vacant corners converted into apartment houses.

It is immediately seized as a good suggestion by tenants, when it is pointed out to them, that the protection it accords to the man underneath is likewise enjoyed because of the quiet overhead, and it may in time come to be general to see in leases:

"And it is hereby further agreed that the said party of the second part (the tenant) obligates himself and the members of his family to wear and use only shoes equipped with rubber heels, and the said party of the first part (the landlord) hereby agrees to pay the expense of fitting rubber heels to all shoes regularly worn by the tenant and the members of his family, provided that such heels shall be fitted only at a shop to be designated by the part of the first part."

THE INTIMATE SIDE OF SENATOR TILLMAN.

[W. A. Lewis in Success Magazine.]

Ben Tillman, lolling back in an armchair, is one personality. Senator Benjamin R. Tillman, on the floor of the United States Senate, is something entirely different. The contrast is wonderful, but unstudied.

There is no other individuality in American public life so ungroomed and earthy as Tillman. Beneath the tousled hair, behind the solitary brown eye, is an intellect colossal and majestic, contemptuous of the exaltations of position, despising all platooning of self, inveighing against whatever savors of sham and humbug.

Tillman dearly loves the hardships of steadfast principles, and revels in the hardest forms of a righteous hatred of lies and liars. He is anything but a novitiate; still, he is extraordinary and a surprising proposition in the geometry of suddenness. He is neither clever nor pouderous. But he bends with no sycophancy, shakes with no vacillation, snaps with no disloyalty, wobbles with no irresolution. His intellectual weapons are wit, satire, invective, irony and scorn, wielded with the edge of daring and the swirl of strength.

In the Senate chamber he always clutches a brand—unlit, aflame or charred. He is tirelessly a-buckle and a-fray, spurred and ungloved, a storm-born blowgiver.

But, reclining in an armchair, at his ease, his mind undisturbed by the funies of the day that has died, unagitated by the expectations of the day unborn, a mischievous smile playing about his mobile lips, the responsibilities of statesmanship laid aside, the strife, conflicts and struggles of public life for the moment abandoned, with just the sweet sympathy of his little family circle to calm him, the undisguised admiration of the woman sitting opposite him, the playful humor of his domestic side, and you have another and distinctly opposite Tillman. A tender mildness comes into the brown eye; a musical cadence pervades the worn voice; and a languor that constitutes positive luxury to this glutton of labor, thought and toil converts into relaxation the exhausting tensions of a mammoth organism of nerves.

No other Senator can arouse his compeers to greater activities. No other man exhibits a fonder tenderness to his family, or can provide more genuine hospitality to his guests.

TO EAT OR NOT TO EAT.

To eat or not to eat? That is the question.
Whether 'tis better for mankind to suffer
The gastronomic insults of the Beef Trust,
Or to lock arms with Battle Creek fanatics,
And, by indorsing, praise them? Dried oats, tough grass—
No more! For with a meal to say we end
All pleasures and the thousand natural joys
The palate's heir to—'tis a consummation
That's much to be deplored. And yet to eat
Tubercular roast beef! Aye, there's the rub.
For in that can of death what germs may come,
When we have shuffled off its metal foil,
Must give us pause. There's a prospect
That makes calamity of a long life.
For who will bear formaldehyde in ham,
The sausage strong and the tinned veal untimely,
The pangs from despised lard, the "sinker" gray,
The insolence of grafters and the burns
That subtle ptomaine to the most worthy gives
With a bare mouthful? Yet who could health foods praise—
The emptiness of hygenic meals—
But that the fear of something in the can
That undiscovered Jungle, from whose bourne
Sinclair has just returned, puzzles the will
And makes us rather bear the ills of tasteless wheat
Than fly to others that we know not of?
And thus the ancient "roast beef of old England"
With shredded herbs drives hungry folks away

FINE PROSPECT FOR THE DERBY

Big Brooklyn Race Likely To Prove Three-Cornered Contest.

RACE TO BE RUN SATURDAY.

OTHER COLTS NOT IN FORM.

SINCE Bohemian, the most forward three-year-old in the stable of James R. Keene is lame, the Brooklyn Derby, to be run next Saturday, promises to be another three-cornered duel between Burgomaster, Accountant and The Quail under conditions which give The Quail an advantage he did not have in the Belmont Stakes at Queens, when he forced Burgomaster to a drive and beat Accountant half a length. The Belmont very properly is a weight-for-age race. And because it is it more nearly resembles the British Derby—the great three-year-old special of the country where the thoroughbred was originally developed—which serves as a model for first-class events for three-year-olds the world over than does any other special of the American season, says the New York Telegraph.

The Brooklyn Derby is not a weight-for-age race, although its distance—one mile and a half—is the same as that of the Derby at Epsom. The weights are fixed by a scheme of allowances, which as often as not makes it possible for a fair three-year-old to beat a real good one. The Quail will next Saturday come in for an allowance of eight pounds because he has not this season won as much as $3,500, while both Accountant and Burgomaster must shoulder 126 apiece.

If public form is reliable The Quail will beat Burgomaster and Accountant under this scheme. He whipped Accountant under even weights in the Belmont, it will be remembered, and he forced Burgomaster to a drive under similar conditions. He gained so rapidly at the end it is no cinch he would not have overtaken Burgomaster as he did Accountant if the distance of the Belmont had been one mile and a half instead of one mile and three furlongs.

John E. Madden, the breeder and developer of The Quail, feels a bit optimistic when he thinks of the Derby, which will pay the winner something like $5,000. He has a good, game candidate and a sound one withal.

These three colts are the only possible starters discriminating students of form consider Derby propositions. Don Diego, the best three-year-old Jack Joyner is training for August Belmont, is lame, and Woolwich has not developed to the promise of his juvenile form. Red Eye, like Don Diego, is lame, and McKittredge and Royal Sceptre are false alarms.

Belmere, winner of the Buffalo Derby, will undoubtedly run with Accountant. The Quail and Burgomaster, but he does not count. He also is a counterfeit. He has speed, but he will not carry it any distance when he is in good company. Instead of enhancing the reputation of Belmere, the result of the Derby at Buffalo has diminished the public regard for Minnie Adams, Hyperion II. and Louis Eater.

Instead of a mere three-horse race, in which only metropolitan interest is centered, and even that not acutely, the coming Brooklyn Derby might have been made the great three-year-old event of the current season, a race in which the entire nation would have taken as much interest as used to be taken in the American Derby at Washington Park. Philip Dwyer had only to leave the race open as long as the Brooklyn Handicap was left open, reduce the entrance fee to $25 or $50 and increase the added money to $10,000 or $15,000.

Such a Derby would have attracted every good three-year-old in the country and a field of ten or fifteen strapping colts and fillies would be ready to respond to the call of the trumpet. Such a Derby would draw to Gravesend track such a crowd as gathered to witness the Brooklyn Handicap and advertise the Brooklyn enterprise as it has never been advertised before.

Ormondale, Sir Huon, Minnie Adams, Whimsical, Content, Israfel, Inquisitor and Good Luck are some of the good three-year-olds this season's Derby misses because it was closed prematurely.

Modify the Derby conditions, as is here suggested, and Brooklyn will have the only first-class three-year-old race of the year. The Tidal, Realization, Brighton Derby and Belmont are not first-class races, because, like the Brooklyn Derby, they are closed too far ahead of their running. The only first-class three-year-old race ever offered in America was the American Derby, discontinued because racing in Illinois fell into bad hands. The Brooklyn Derby should be the natural successor to the American Derby, because its running is well timed.

SAVAGE MOROS

[Hamilton Wright, Philippine Correspondent of Leslie's Weekly.]

The Moro is a savage, primal man, a Malay, which is a branch of one of the oldest stocks of which we know. He is subject, when not under the influence of a self-contained ruler, to strange, murderous fits of insanity. When a Moro, without effort on his part, becomes seized with a desire to murder, he is said to have "run amuck," and at such times he will rush wildly, slashing and killing everyone he chances to meet, even his own people. When, however, he purposely works himself into a religious frenzy, it is with the desire to kill Christians, and, by the faith of the prophet, ascend forthwith into paradise. The Moro in this state of passion is said to be juramentado. He has then taken a religious oath, perhaps administered by some sacred hadji who has duly made his pilgrimage to Mecca; he has bound himself up so that he suffers excruciating agonies, and through physical suffering is reduced to a nervous frenzy. Having once taken the oath, the Moro juramentado is doomed to slay until at last he himself is slain. Here in Jolo, since the American occupation, a man went juramentado while the American band was playing on the plaza. In shooting the Moro, who had mingled with the soldiers, a soldier was slightly injured, and a musician who was playing the trombone had his instrument perforated in several places. A Spanish General who was troubled by having his soldiers killed by juramentados, about twenty years ago, shelled the residence of the Sultan with field-guns. The Sultan, who was absent at the time of the shelling, rushed into Jolo, saying, "General, your soldiers are killing my people; stop them!" "I cannot stop them, as they have gone juramentado," replied the General. He had no more trouble with juramentados.

The Moro is a Mohammedan, but he has perverted the Mohammedan belief until at times it is a weird, grotesque and terrible religion. In the heart of the Moro there is no fear of death; it is to him but an incident of life, and his belief, as he has fashioned it, is that he who dies in battle is cleansed from sin and goes straight to the bosoms of the houris in paradise. The Moro's idea of government is force; he has never known anything else; if you are kind to him he thinks you fear him. His world is ruled by fear, not love. He has no definite comprehension of abstract principles of government, nor does he appreciate an absent government. His allegiance is personal, and it is paid to the datto or American officer with whom he comes in daily contact. This disposition to personal allegiance has been handed down to him through legions of dattos, or feudal chieftains. Until the American occupation, these dattos were continually at war with each other, and it is largely through this lack of unity that the Moros never subjugated much of the territory bevond the country in which they lived. Their wars with the Filipinos, the peaceable Christian tribes who lived hundreds of miles to the north, were confined to acts of piracy and raiding. His religion, as set forth in the Koran, tells the Moro he must obey without question his duly constituted superiors. But the Moro is impressionable, and under rigid personal leadership makes a faithful servant. For this reason the Moros of the island of Mindanao, who have been thoroughly conquered and subjugated, will make and are making excellent citizens, while the Moros of the little island of Sulu, never having been whipped by the Spaniards, knew no law but that of their dattos. Under bad dattos they are bad men, and under good dattos they may be good men. These men were a bad lot, and it is unfair to judge the average Moro by them.

WILLIAM WOOLFOLK HELD TO ANSWER.

William Wolfolk, who stabbed G. S. Hall, son of Dr. S. Johnson Hall, of 708 East Market street, inflicting injuries that caused death, was presented in the Police Court yesterday, charged with murder, and was held to answer without bail. The crime with which Woolfolk is charged was committed on June 5. Hall was talking to friends on the corner of Clay and Market streets, when Woolfolk came up and began to use obscene language. Upon being remonstrated with by Hall, Woolfolk drew a knife and stabbed the former to the heart. Hall ran to his father's office, several blocks away, and expired in his arms. The accused is under eighteen years of age, as was his victim.

FUSION IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Washington, June 12.—[Special.]—The recent decision of the United States Supreme Court requiring officers of corporations to open their books was invoked successfully in New York to-day, according to information at the Department of Justice.

Wm. H. McAllister, secretary of the Tobacco Trust, and two other witnesses were ordered by Judge Lacombe last week to produce the books and papers demanded by the grand jury in the prosecution of the Tobacco Trust case under Special Attorney Taft. It was generally supposed that the witnesses would again decline to make an effort to appeal the question of their rights to the Supreme Court at Washington. But the three men promptly appeared before the court armed with their books. The trust officials have been asked for a large amount of correspondence, and several days will likely be required before the grand jury can tell whether the data furnished included all the subpena asked for.

Prospects For Fusion Good.

The prospect of fusion between Pennsylvania Democrats and Lincolnites is brighter to-day than yesterday and as fusion prospects brighten, Penrose prospects darken. James M. Guffey, so-called Democratic boss in Pennsylvania, and all the Republican gangsters have practically abandoned hope of controlling the Democratic State convention which is to meet in Harrisburg June 27, and by controlling which Guffey is accused of having meant to defeat fusion, nominate a Democrat for Governor and in this way play into the hands of the Bosie Penrose machine. Reports from many parts of Pennsylvania show the sentiment of Democrats to be overwhelmingly in favor of the indorsement of ex-State Senator Lewis Emery, Jr., the candidate of the Lincoln party, for Governor. The Philadelphia North American to-day says:

"Significant of the revolt which threatens James M. Guffey, the State boss of the Democratic organization, if he shall persist in the demand that only a Democrat must be nominated for Governor was the expression of sentiment by prominent Democrats and State convention delegates of Philadelphia and other counties yesterday in favor of the Lincoln candidate for Governor."

Bill Not So Sweeping.

The bill passed by the Senate and pending before the House Committee on Elections is not as speeping as is generally understood. The bill prohibits only those corporations from contributing to campaign funds which are organized by authority of any laws of Congress. The measure thus strikes principally at national bank contributions. The bill not only includes presidential elections, but any election in which a member of the House or Senate is concerned.

A Little Mistake.

Representative Heflin, of Alabama, who has been a strong advocate of a change in the present provisions of the Railroad Rate Bill so as to allow employes of railroads to travel on passes, was very much taken back to-day when several members of the House presented him with telegrams protesting against the "Heflin" amendment prohibiting the railroads issuing such passes. It seems that the senders confused the name Heflin and Hepburn, much to the discomfort of the Alabama member.

BACK TO CONFERENCE

House Sends Railroad Rate Bill Without Expression.

Washington, June 12.—With a very large proportion of the members present, due to the activity of the Republican and Democratic whips, the House to-day passed a rule sending the Railroad Rate Bill back to conference, as asked for by the Senate, without even an expression of its wishes as to any of the amendments to the bill.

The rule was debated for forty minutes. The leaders participated in the discussion, the Democrats taking the position that the time was opportune to concur in the sleeping-car amendment and instruct the conferees as to the anti-pass amendment. Although the Democrats were aided by eight Republicans, they could not command votes enough to defeat the rule, which was adopted, 184 to 99.

While the Sundry Civil Bill was under consideration, the House, in Committee of the Whole, adopted an amendment offered by Mr. Bowersock, (Kas.) prohibiting canteens in soldiers' homes. Unexpectedly the Neill-Reynolds report on the condition of Chicago packing-houses came in for severe criticism, Mr. Mondell (Wyo.), Mr. Slayden (Tex.) and Mr. Fulkerson (Mo.) discussing the advisability of the report in scathing terms. Mr. Ames (Mass.) defended both the President and the report and insisted that the packers should pay the cost of inspection.

The House at 5:45 p. m. adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

STATEHOOD BILL

Withdrawn From and Again Presented To Senate.

Washington, June 12.—The conference report on the Statehood Bill was to-day withdrawn from and again presented to the Senate, the new report containing the compromise provision agreed upon by the conferees of the two houses. Much of the remainder of the day was devoted to the bill, extending to thirty-six hours the time that live stock may be carried in transit without unloading. Senator Warren was in charge of the measure and he and a number of Senators debated it at length. During the discussion there was some reference to the proposed legislation for the regulation of packing-houses, and Senator Lodge said the packers are standing in their own light in not inviting the most rigid inspection. The bill was passed.

The bill incorporating the Lake Erie and Ohio river ship canal was discussed at some length, but its further consideration was postponed until to-morrow. A number of minor bills were passed.

The Senate adjourned at 6:10 p. m.

Meat Inspection Law Promised.

Washington, June 12.—The House Committee on Agriculture continued its consideration of the Beveridge meat inspection amendment until after 6 o'clock this evening, but did not complete its tentative consideration of all of the features of the amendment. The question of fees has not been reached. The only statement made by the committee was that the country could be assured that the result of the deliberations would be a meat inspection law which would suit the most radical demands.

Patents For Kentuckians.

Washington, June 12.—The following patents have been issued to Kentuckians: Ernest B. Allen, Louisville, air supply apparatus for air brakes. Edwin D. Foltz, Louisville, seed separator; Abraham Knoble, Louisville, electric railway gate; Joseph J. Moser, West Covington, can inclosure; Ambrose Ridd, Newport, apparatus for bluing metal sheets; John B. Williams and A. V. Oldham, Louisville, Container top.

FAMOUS FREAKS

ONCE KNOWN OVER WHOLE LAND, BUT NOW IN RETIREMENT.

Old-Time Museum Man Talks of Barnum's "What Is It" and Other Curiosities.

"One of the funniest freaks I ever ran across," said Frank M. Drew, an old timer in the dime museum business, "was Millie Christine, 'the two-headed nightingale.'

"Millie certainly could sing. And she had two heads all right enough, which caused me several times two kinds of trouble.

"I contracted to bring her to Cleveland," explained Drew to a reporter for the Plain Dealer. "She was to have so much a week and her hotel and traveling expenses. I took her over to the old Kennard House, and the manager started an argument. He said [illegible] two mouths had to be fed I would [illegible]e to pay two board bills. That [illegible]d the question, and when she [illegible]own the ticket agent compelle[illegible] pay two railroad fares. She [illegible]an expensive proposition.

"Millie was [illegible]d and highly educated. The[illegible] would hold conversations with [illegible]ch other in all sorts of languages. She had traveled all over the world as a freak, and she had learned every language.

"She could give an entire programme by herself. First she would sing an alto solo, then then soprano solo. Occasionally she would sing a duet.

"She had four arms and four legs. When it came time for the instrumental music she could play a simple thing with two hands, or she could play an intricate composition with four hands. Great girl, she was.

"The most expensive exhibit I ever had was Lucy Zarote, the Mexican midget. She was really the smallest woman in the world. She was about twenty-two inches high and played like a little child. She got $20 an hour for sitting on the stage.

"I don't believe there ever was a boy who hasn't heard of Barnum's 'what is it'? The bills called him Zip. He was a Southern colored man with a peculiar-shaped head. I don't believe any one really figured out just what was the matter with him.

"Living skeletons and fat men and women were plentiful as the air. The best skeleton we ever had was Isaac Sprague.

"Isaac used to walk around with a can of milk in his hand to keep himself alive. He sure was a thin one. We had a fellow, though, who was almost as thin as Isaac, who could eat anything and everything. I never saw such an appetite. Still, he couldn't get fat.

"During one particular week we had two fat women on exhibition. 'Big Laura' Wolford was the star and Hattie Bowen was the other. Laura was colored, Hattie white. Laura weighed almost a thousand pounds and Hattie weighed a little less than eight hundred.

"A Circassian girl could be made in a few minutes. All that was needed was a luxuriant head of hair or a good white wig. Nothing else was needed except a little bleaching material for the long-haired girl.

"Jo-Jo and Creo were the once famous hair man and hair woman. Both were completely covered with hair—real hair, too. There was nothing false about them.

"The camel girl was a funny looking object. Whenever she walked she walked away from herself. From the thighs down her legs were turned the wrong way. If she stooped over her knees would stick out behind like a camel's.

"One day he would be the exile. Next day he might go into a cage and be a wild man. He got a better salary for being a wild man, but it didn't make much difference to him which he was.

"If anything he would rather play the exile, because the wild man had to try to eat raw meat. Ivanovitch didn't like that very much.

"Trip was the armless wonder. He used to travel with Barnum's. Trip was really good. He could write, sew, feed himself and do anything else merely by the use of his toes.

"We had a girl, too, who was born without arms. She went Trip a little further and played the piano with her toes. That is no joke.

"Next to the Circassian girls snake charmers were easiest found. Anybody could go into a cage with the snakes.

"Bill Doris had the largest one that ever played Cleveland. One of them died at the museum. It swallowed a big woolen blanket and choked to death.

"Sad end for him. The blanket got caught in his teeth. You know their teeth slant backward, so that whenever food is swallowed it has to remain in the stomach until it is digested. That is what queered this reptile.

"The ossified man I found in Canada. I brought him down here by paying the expenses of himself and his son and giving them a little money. They stirred up the most attention the museum ever had.

"Myrtle Corbin, one of our four-legged girls, was a good drawing card until she was married. In her travels she found a man from Kentucky and married him. Now she has three or four children. They live in the Kentucky mountain region, and so far as I know are perfectly happy.

"Annie Jones was the best bearded lady we ever had. She married a lecturer with a museum. It is a peculiar thing about freaks that practically all of them are married. They marry each other, or they marry some one who wants to 'get in on' the salary they make.

"We got a lot of free advertising out of Lizzie Mills, the big-footed girl. We had an offer published of anyone who would marry her. We never had to make good with the money, for no one would take her. If her feet were concealed she was really a nice-looking girl. She had an attack of elephantiasis, I guess."

WILL RESUME

Federal Court Hearings In New Albany.

COFFIN-SHAPED MISSION HOUSE SOLD BY CHURCH.

COMPROMISE DAMAGE SUITS.

There is a prospect that for the first time in several years cases will be tried in the Federal Court at New Albany at the term which begins the first Monday of next month. The case of Mabel Hogan, administratrix of the estate of Homer Hogan, deceased, against the Southern Railway Company has been transferred from Indianapolis to New Albany and the papers received by George Cardwill, deputy clerk of the Federal Court at New Albany. The suit probably will be tried at the July term.

It was instituted in the Floyd Circuit Court at New Albany about a year ago and $10,000 was asked on account of the killing of Homer Hogan, husband of the plaintiff, in the railway collision at Maude, Ill., Christmas, 1904. It was transferred from the State Court to the Federal Court at Indianapolis. Two other damage suits have also been filed in the Federal Court at New Albany. One of Hattie Wesbecker, of Louisville, against the Louisville and Southern Indiana Traction Company to recover $5,000 for alleged personal injuries, and the other an action brought by George Ayles, of New Albany, against the Southern Railway Company to recover $20,000 damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained while in the employ of the company as engineer.

Will Receive $500.

Miss Helen Pennington, who left New Albany a few days ago for Los Angeles, Cal., to live, will receive $500 as a compromise settlement from the Tennessee Central Railroad Company, suit having been brought by her against that corporation. Yesterday her attorney in New Albany, Judge John H. Weathers, was notified that the settlement had been effected at Nashville. Miss Pennington was a passenger on one of the trains of the company and was injured in a wreck near Nashville August 14, 1904. Her cousin, Miss Herbert, who was sitting beside her in the wrecked coach, had her right arm torn from the socket, and in a damage suit which followed she was given judgment of $6,000. Miss Pennington was valedictorian of the class of 1905 of the New Albany High School and in addition to being an exceptionally bright girl she has considerable local reputation on account of her gifts as a writer.

Coffin-Shaped Mission Sold.

The First Presbyterian church at New Albany sold yesterday to P. N. Curl, a wholesale grocer of that city, the mission school building on West Main street, between Seventh and Eighth, the consideration being $1,200. The mission was established on the grounds about forty years ago and a frame structure that had been used as a hospital during the Civil War was the first mission building. As the mission prospered the old frame was torn away and the queer-shaped brick building now standing on the lot was erected. On account of its resemblance in general shape to a coffin, it was the subject of much comment. For the last few years the building has not been used for mission school purposes and the congregation decided to dispose of it. Mr. Curl will have the spire removed and convert the old house of worship into a dwelling.

Compromised For $1,500.

The suit for $10,000 damages brought by Albert A. Burkhardt, Jesse A. Burkhardt and Robert Kelly against the Southern Railway Company in the Floyd Circuit Court at New Albany for injury to their property has been compromised and stricken from the docket. Yesterday the company paid over to the attorneys for the plaintiffs $1,500, the amount of the compromise. The suit arose, it was alleged, on account of the company changing a water course and thereby causing the water during heavy rain storms to "back up" into the basement of a mill owned by the plaintiffs, thereby injuring the property.

ITEMS OF INTEREST IN NEW ALBANY.

—New Albany Chapter, No. 17, Royal Arch Masons, will confer the Royal Arch degree at the meeting Friday night.

—Andrew Stumpf and Ernest Wimmer, of Baltimore, Md., are visiting Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Sowle, 1819 East Spring street.

—A euchre will be given this afternoon and to-night in St. Joseph's Hall for the benefit of St. Joseph's Hospital by the Ladies' Hospital Club.

—Miss Winifred Conner, who has been a student at DePauw University, Greencastle, is home to spend the summer vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Conner, on the Silver Hills, west of the city.

—Miss Katherine F. Jacque and William S. Smith, both of Lafayette township, are to be married the morning of June 19 in St. Mary's-of-the-Knobs Catholic church by the parish priest, the Rev. Father Semmershein.

—Wm. F. Lang, 1508 East Elm street, and Miss Georgia A. Hurst, 507 Vincennes street, are to be married to-night at the rectory of Holy Trinity Catholic church, the ceremony to be performed by the Rev. Charles Curran, the rector. They will live at 717 East Market street.

—Officers have been elected by the Thalia Club, as follows: Miss Nettye Irwin, president; Miss Hattie C. Deeble, vice president; Miss Minta C. McQuiddy, secretary; Mrs. C. N. Douglas, treasurer; Miss Ida Sackett, chairman Executive Committee; Miss Mary Cardwill, director of work.

—Mr. and Mrs. Tony Genung and their daughter are here from St. Louis to visit relatives and attend the home-coming celebration in Louisville. Mr. Genung has been on the letter-carrier force in St. Louis for more than thirty years. He is a brother of Walter Genung, a member of the letter-carrier force here.

—John H. Franklin filed a suit in the Circuit Court yesterday, asking that he be granted a decree of divorce from Florida Franklin, cruel treatment being alleged as the ground of the action. He alleges in the complaint that his wife refused to cook his meals, declined to accompany him on social occasions, and at times came home intoxicated.

—The congregation of Mt. Tabor church, organized a few weeks ago, has elected a board of trustees, as follows: Andrew Hand, James M. Boyd, John Mann, Joseph Smith and Oliver C. Mann. This church was established over fifty years ago as a mission of the Third Presbyterian church, this city, but was merged into an independent organization a few weeks ago.

—Mrs. Elizabeth Kremer and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kremer, who were living in San Francisco during the earthquake and fire, have arrived in this city. Mrs. Kremer will remain here permanently, while Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kremer will return to the Pacific coast in January. Their home was badly shaken by the earthquake, but escaped the fire that followed, but Mr. Kremer's music store, stock and building was destroyed.

—The funeral of Mrs. Delphine Kent, an old resident of the city, took place yesterday afternoon from the family home, East Tenth and Main streets. Services were conducted by the Rev. W. C. McCracken, rector of St. Paul's, and the burial was in Fairview. The pallbearers were J. K. Woodward, S. A. Culbertson, Evan B. Stotsenburg, S. E. Simonson, S. B. Kerr and Walter B. Creed. Among those present from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bixby, of Chicago; Will Kent, of Kentland, and Todd Kent, of Brookston.

—The closing recital given by Miss Packard and her pupils at Music Hall last night was an interesting event. The excellent programme was participated in by Misses Bonnie Dent McKay, Louise Manor, Louise Weilbrener, Ruth Murphy, Eleanor Stoy, Margaret Barrett, Lorraine Engleman, Beatrice Blackiston, Virginia Godfrey, Emily Brewer, Minnie Johnson, Ruth Ewing, Irma Clipp, Emma Kannapell and Mary Breetz; Mrs. Chris. Cullen, Lawrence Blake, Will Powell, Gordon Pierson, Harry Inman and Michael Winn.

—George Case, being unable to care for his four-months-old boy, Chester A. Case, whose mother died a few months ago, was forced to turn the infant over to Probation Officer Joseph H. Kraft. The officer found a home for the little one with a family that had recently lost a baby by death. The parting between the helpless infant and the young father at the Central police station was most affecting. Case would not have agreed to the separation, but he could not look after the child himself, and the people who had been caring for it had failed to give it the proper treatment.

—Invitations to the marriage of Miss Katherine Bundy Gordon to Mr. Charles Wallace McCord have been issued by the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Emerson G. Gordon. The ceremony will be performed in St. Paul's church at 9 o'clock in the evening of June 28. They will leave the same evening for New York, sailing thence to Europe for a two months' stay. On their return they will be at home after September 10 at 1206 East Main street. The prospective bride is one of the most charming young women in New Albany, while Mr. McCord is at the head of an extensive mercantile establishment in Louisville.

Elect Geo. T. Grinstead Department Commander.

LOUISVILLE CHOSEN FOR NEXT ENCAMPMENT.

OWENTON MEN SUE ON UNUSUAL GROUNDS.

SAY CONTRACT WAS ANNULLED

Berea, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The G. A. R. met in the new Memorial chapel at 9:30 this morning and elected the following officers: Department commander, George T. Grinstead, Post No. 99; service commander, Thomas Sheehan, Jr.; vice commander, Richard Lilly; chaplain, C. W. Lewis; historian, O. A. Reynolds; medical director, William Bowman. Delegates to next annual encampment: Charles K. Lombard, Enos McGoffin, John H. Bryant, John Russell. Alternates: William Patrick, D. W. Capito, E. P. Marrs, G. W. Ward. The next State encampment is to be held in Louisville.

Prof. L. V. Dodge, of Berea, was a candidate for department commander. Immediately after the election of officers the outgoing commander, Brevard Matthews, was presented with a gold G. A. R. badge set with diamonds. T. F. Beyland made the presentation speech. After the official business meeting, the veterans attended a mass-meeting addressed by one of their number. The meeting was greatly enjoyed though the weather conditions were not good.

KENTUCKY EDUCATORS

Meet In Bowling Green After Home Coming.

Bowling Green, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The Kentucky Educational Association will be in session here June 19, 20 and 21, and prospects are good for a magnificent meeting. Committees have been named to look after the various needs of the visitors, of whom there are expected to be a great number, and special entertainments galore have been provided, including excursions by rail and river to Mammoth Cave. The dates of the meeting have been arranged so as not to conflict with the Home-coming celebration, and, in fact, each is expected to contribute to the other.

Bomar—Fishback.

Versailles, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The wedding of Miss Elizabeth Bowmar and Mr. George Taylor Fishback took place at the Methodist church in this city this evening at 8:30 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. T. Taylor, of Nicholasville. The church was decorated with daisies. The bride's sister, Mrs. Herman Bowmar, of St. Paul, Minn., was her dame of honor and Misses Katherine Bowmar, Lottie Davis, Ezza Fishback and Frances Berry acted as bridesmaids. Mr. Stewart Hunter, of New York, was the bridegroom's best man. The groomsmen were Messrs. Herman Bowmar, of St. Paul; Whitley Sessions, of Gulfport, Miss.; Charles Nuckols, Jr., and Randolph Fishback. The bride was preceded to the altar by two little flower girls, Misses Cicely Bowmar and Marian Thornton, carrying baskets filled with daisies. Mr. Fishback and his bride left to-night for a short wedding trip.

Partial Permission.

Winchester, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—The Fiscal Court to-day granted the right to cross the turnpikes to the company which proposes to build an electric railroad from Lexington to this city, but refused permission to build on the right of way of the pikes in any other manner. The road is to begin work in six months and to finish within three years.

Fight With Shotguns.

West Liberty, Ky., June 12.—Bob Tipton and Miles Patrick fought on White Oak, this county. The weapons used were double-barreled shot guns. Patrick was killed, but Tipton was not hurt. Patrick was Tipton's son-in-law. Tipton is a son of Dr. Tipton, a well-known physician. Family trouble was the cause.

Bruton—Prewitt.

Jackson, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—J. W. Prewitt, local agent for the L. and E. Railroad, left this morning for Mt. Sterling, where he will be married on June 14 to Miss Pearl Bruton, of that place. After an extended Northern trip Mr. Prewitt will return here to resume his position.

Dies On Roadside.

Winchester, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—James S. Bush, who arrived from Cincinnati last night on a visit to relatives, died suddenly this morning while riding along the road. He was sixty-five years old and leaves a family.

Thomas Bolton Dead.

Williamsburg, Ky., June 12.—[Special.]—Thomas Bolton, a young brakeman who was hurt at Lafollette last week, died to-day. Burial here to-morrow.

Mrs. W. E. Corey Wants Divorce.

Reno, Nev., June 12.—Mrs. Wm. Ellis Corry, wife of the President of the United States Steel Corporation, this morning filed a petition in the Second District Court of Nevada at this place for an absolute decree of divorce.

TOOK HIS LIFE

Because of Drink Habit and Poor Health.

WM. MAYFIELD, OF HOWARD PARK, TRIED TO REFORM.

MARRIAGE LICENSE ISSUED TO OLD COUPLE.

WERE CHILD SWEETHEARTS.

William Mayfield, of Howard Park, a suburb of Jeffersonville, being despondent over the fact that he could not quit drinking and had not been in good health for some time, committed suicide yesterday morning by drinking laudanum.

"I will stop drinking some day," he said to his wife a few days ago, and it is supposed he meant by this that in case he could not give up the habit he would kill himself. Mayfield was employed at the Jeffersonville plant of the American Car and Foundry Company, for which place he started early yesterday morning. When he returned just before noon he said he was not well and went into his room. In a short time Mrs. Mayfield heard something drop on the floor and detected the odor of laudanum. She went into the room, found the empty bottle on the floor and her husband rapidly becoming unconscious.

Dr. Claud C. Crum, of Jeffersonville, was summoned and reached the patient after he became unconscious. It was then too late to save the man's life, although every possible effort was made to do so.

Mayfield was well-known in Louisville, having operated a parcel express wagon between that city and Jeffersonville several years. He was born in Washington county, Ind., about fifty years ago and came to Jeffersonville sixteen years ago. Before leaving Washington county he was married to Miss Josephine Thomas, who survives her husband with three sons and three daughters. The other relatives are five brothers, Frank M. Mayfield and Claud Mayfield, of Jeffersonville; Joseph Mayfield, Rufus Mayfield and Festus Mayfield, of Little York, Washington county, Ind., and two sisters, Mrs. Ethel Shannon, of Louisville and Mrs. J. J. Morgan, of Jeffersonville. Coroner Froman M. Coots was summoned and viewed the remains and will return a verdict in accordance with the above facts. The funeral arrangements have not been announced.

Hymen Conquers Age.

Apparently as happy as if they were eighteen and sixteen, Mrs. Sarah E. Robertson, who will be seventy-four years of age on her next birthday, of Charlestown, Ind., and William F. Robertson, who was recently sixty-eight years of age, of Bloomington, Ind., entered the office of George W. Badger, Clerk of the Clark Circuit Court, in Jeffersonville, and timidly asked for a marriage license yesterday afternoon. The document was issued and the wedding will take place to-morrow at Charlestown, with the Rev. J. E. Murr officiating.

The forthcoming marriage is the culmination of a courtship that began in childhood, when a strong attachment sprang up between the two, who are second cousins, but they never reached the point where they decided to marry until each had been married for years and had lost their former companion. Mr. Robertson is a son of Wesley Robertson, who lived in Clark county. Mrs. Robertson's maiden name was Sarah E. Ruddell and her family was a well-known pioneer one. Mrs. Robertson was married to M. W. Robertson in 1855.

NOTES OF THE NEWS IN JEFFERSONVILLE.

—In the office of George W. Badger, Circuit Clerk, last evening, M. F. Doherty filed a claim against the estate of Henry Hays for $8.70, which is a balance on an account for drugs.

—A marriage license was issued to John H. Bolly, a butcher, and Miss Alma E. Ester, a school teacher, both of whom live at Henryville, and the wedding will take place Sunday.

—The Sellersburg High School will have its commencement on Friday evening and Prof. Frank E. Andrews, of this city, will address the graduating class. There will be twelve graduates.

—J. W. Fortune, Thomas J. Brock and George W. Badger have been selected by the Clark County Bar Association as a committee to arrange for an outing of the officers and attorneys of this county.

—Nothing has been heard from the Central Hospital for the Insane regarding the papers that were forwarded last week for the commitment of Frank S. Daily, who is confined in the county jail, and is in a serious condition.

—The grading of the line of the Louisville and Northern Railway and Lighting Company between this city and Charlestown is practically finished and the road will be completed as fast as the track can be laid from Watson.

—The body of Charles Smith, who died in Cleveland, O., of consumption, will arrive this morning for burial. He had been ill for some time and went to Cleveland a few weeks ago to make his home with a sister in hopes of finding relief.

—Roy R. Worrall, a draftsman, who is a son of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Worrall, of this city, will be married in New Albany to-night to Miss Catherine Hennig, a daughter of Mrs. Anna Hennig, 1736 Oak street. They will reside in New Albany.

—A large number of Home-comers have visited the Indiana Reformatory during the past two days under the impression they can go through the institution, but under the rules visitors are not admitted and all of them have been turned away.

—Eleven prisoners are now confined in the county jail, the majority of whom were sent there from the City Court. Sheriff Pernett receives forty cents per day for feeding them, and claims he can barely come out even on account of the high price of food.

—A divorce was granted Marion Kelly from Emma Kelly by Judge H. C. Montgomery on the ground of abandonment. They were married in 1891 and separated four years ago. The custody of a thirteen-year-old son was given to an uncle, Joseph Huffman.

—Rhoda Maupin and husband, heirs of Elizabeth Shrader, yesterday transferred to George T. Patterson and Mary I. Graves in the office of George W. Stoner, Recorder of Clark county, 135 acres of land located in sections 20, 21 and 28 for a consideration of $1,450.

—Miss Augusta Heyn, a native of this city and a sister of Charles Heyn, Herman Heyn, Will Heyn and Miss Rosa Heyn, all of whom live here, died suddenly Monday night at the home of her sister, Mrs. Oswald, on the Brownsboro pike, just out of Louisville.

—Charles W. Casperke, local manager of the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Company, was married yesterday in Memphis, Tenn., to Miss Mara Newkirk, of that city, and will be at home after June 21. Mr. Casperke came here from Louisville about fifteen months ago.

—Walter Varble, who drives a delivery wagon for William Weber, reported to Sergt. Kendall yesterday that he had been bitten by a dog belonging to Taylor McCarthy, and asked that it be killed, but when Patrolman Hutt was sent to dispatch the dog the owner refused to give his consent.

—Wells in the northern and eastern part of the city that have been unfailing heretofore are beginning to go dry, and many complaints are being made to the Board of Public Works. The cause is believed to be that the water company is exhausting the supply at the ne[illegible]ing [illegible]

—[illegible] Doerer, a son of Mrs. [illegible] Doerer, who lives at Spring and Maple streets, was taken to Louisville yesterday afternoon to be given medical attention at the home of an uncle. He has been ill for ten weeks, his first complaint being malarial fever and other troubles have followed. He is now afflicted with a form of peritonitis.

—Judge Schwaninger yesterday announced that he would hear no more cases on the charge of keeping saloons open after 11 o'clock at night where only four or five minutes were involved, and unless it was shown the places were open as late as 11:10 he would dismiss them, giving the barkeepers the benefit of a variation in watches.

—The Port Fulton Town Board, at its special meeting, elected Frank X. Hurst to succeed Henry White, who was one of the five Trustees and moved into this city. The board is now composed of four Democrats and one Republican, but was until a short time ago three Republicans and one Democrat. The bond of James O. Eversole as Marshal was approved.

HELD GUILTY.

Convicted of Taking Concessions From Burlington Road On Exports.

Kansas City, June 12.—The cases of the four meat packing companies, charged with accepting rebates, were to-day given to the jury in the United States District Court here. A verdict of guilty was found in a short time.

The cases are those of Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Cudahy & Co. and the Nelson-Morris Packing Company. They were charged in indictments returned here last December with accepting from the Burlington railway concessions on shipments from the Kansas City plants to New York for export. The cases were consolidated for trial purposes.

COTTON MARKETS.

New Orleans, June 12.—Spot cotton was steady and unchanged, although wactors asked an advance of ⅛c. Sales 2,650 bales, including 1,000 to arrive. Low ordinary 7⅞c nominal; ordinary 8⅜c; good ordinary 9 1-16c; low middling 10½c; middling 11 1-8c; good middling 11⅝c; middling fair 12c nominal. Receipts 948 bales; stock 75,154. Futures opened steady, unchanged to 6 points higher, in sympathy with the advance in New York. Toward the closing the market worked 5@6 points lower than yesterday's closing on sharp selling by shorts and the morning selling by Liverpool. Shorts bought in New York against the sales here. July sold off 14 points from the highest and at the close was but a point above the lowest. The closing was steady. The range was as follows:

Estimated receipts at the ports to-day 6,000 bales, against 12,396 last week and 16,632 last year. For the week 40,000 bales, against 55,170 last week and 80,376 last year. To-day's receipts at New Orleans were 948 bales, against 4,115 last year, and at Houston 1,022 bales, against 4,645 last year.

New York, June 12.—The cotton market was quiet and irregular during to-day's session, with the close 5 points higher on near, to 4 points lower on more distant months. Sales for the day were estimated at about 150,000 bales. The opening was firm at an advance of 4@9 points, with the old crop months leading the advance on a renewal of covering by shorts which were influenced by firmer Liverpool calbes. Almost at once after the opening, however, July in New Orleans broke about 10 points and the list here eased off under realizing. July continued relatively firm on the decline so far as the local market was concerned, and held an advance of about 2 points, while later positions sold 1 to 3 points net lower. A rally of a few points followed the publication of the weekly weather report at midday, but the market eased off again toward the close, rumors of showers in Texas and reports of a less active spot demand being depressing factors, as well as the absence of fresh buying for long account and the tendency among smaller longs to take profits.

Liverpool, June 12.—Spot cotton quiet at prices 6@8 points higher; American middling fair 6.47d; good middling 6.33d; middling 6.11d; low middling 5.93d; good ordinary 5.73d; ordinary 5.53d. The sales of the day were 6,000 bales, of which 500 were for speculation an export, and included 5,600 American. Receipts 4,000 bales, including 700 American. Futures opened steady and closed quiet.

COFFEE MARKET.

New York, June 12.—Spot, Rio steady; No. 7 invoice 7¾c; mild steady. The market for futures opened steady at unchanged prices to an advance of 5 points on one month, but eased off as a result of rather disappointing cables from Havre. Trading was very quiet and there was no special feature. The close was steady, net unchanged to 5 points lower. Sales for the day were reported at 33,500 bags, including July at 6.20c, September at 6.35c, December at 6.60@6.65c, January at 6.70c, March at 6.90c, pril at 7c and May at 7c.

New York.—The opening was steady and unchanged to an advance of 5 points on April, which was considered a very good showing, in view of the fact that after opening ¼@½ franc higher, in response to the American gains of the previous day, Havre lost the advance before the hour of the local opening. Hamburg was also net unchanged and the Brazilian markets showed no fresh feature. Receipts continued liberal at Brazilian points, but are now running nearer to last year's, when the movement at this time was increasing. Receipts at the two ports were 24,000 bags, against 23,000 last year, and Jundiahy receipts were 7,000, against 11,000. Sao Paulo receipts for the day were 13,379 bags, against 13,600 last year. Trading here was very quiet during the forenoon, sales to midday being 8,000 bags, and prices lost a partial 5 points under the light offerings in the absence of prompt support.—(Ware & Leland.

Oil Quotations.

Oil City, June 12.—Credit balances $1.64; shipments 66,398 bbls., average 62,143; runs 16,674, average 56,297; shipments (Lima) 44,573, average 56,948; runs (Lima) 10,961, average 33,957.

Wilmington, June 12.—Spirits of turpentine firm at 56@56¾c. Rosin, nothing doing. Tar firm at $1.90. Crude turpentine firm at $2.90, $4.40 and $4.75.

Charleston, June 12.—Turpentine and rosin, nothing doing.

Boston Wool.

Boston, June 12.—Interest in the wool market is centered in the West. There is very little trading in the market here, as wholesale dealers are tending to refuse to pay high prices demanded in many cases. The lack of stock is said to be responsible for a large part of the dullness which has prevailed in the local market of late. Territory wools are without feature. New medium half-bloods bring 28c or 68@70c scoured and ⅜ up to 30c, making a clean cost of 67@68c for the latter grade. Pulled wools are dull. Foreign grades hold firm.

Ohio and Pennsylvania—XX and above 34@34½c; X 31@32c; No. 1 37@38c; No. 2 37@38c; fine unwashed 25@26c; quarter-blood unwashed 31½@32c; ⅜-blood 32@33c; half-blood 32@33c; unwashed delaine 28@29c; fine washed delaine 36@37c.

St. Louis Wool.

St. Louis, June 12.—Wool steady; medium grades, combing and clothing 24@29c; light fine 22@27c; heavy fine 16@18c; tub-washed [illegible]

[illegible]erpool Grain.

Liverpool, June 12.—Wheat—Spot nominal. Futures dull; July 6s 6¾d; September 6s 7¼d; December 6s 7¼d. Corn—Spot steady; American mixed (old) 4s 9½d. Futures dull; July 4s 7⅝d; September 4s 6d.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL

MONETARY.

Tuesday Evening, June 12.—New York money market conditions were unchanged to-day, call loans ruling around 3 per cent. The demand for time loans was light. Conditions in the local market show no change. A fairly good borrowing demand was reported, with rates for credit quoted at 5 to 6 per cent.

Day's clearing	$2,144,541
Balance	509,719

Stock Exchange Sales.

50 shares West Penn common	31
20 shares West Penn common	30¾
50 shares West Penn common	30½
5 shares New Orleans Ry. and Lt. com.	35

The advance in the bid for New Orleans Railway and Light common to 35½ on the local Stock Exchange to-day was due to an error in New Orleans quotations which were received here as 35⅜ bid and 36 asked, when they should have been 33⅜ and 34.

There is good reason for the statement that interests closely allied with the New York Central have been for some time quietly buying the bonds of the International Traction Company. This fact may have been the impetus for the sharp advance in the shares of the International Traction Company and seems to justify the belief that the ultimate outcome will be the absorption of the traction company by the New York Central.

Louisville stockholders of the Memphis Street Railway Company do not want the property taken by the holding company proposed by Isidore Newman & Co., of New York, who with associates own a controlling interest. They have petitioned Messrs. Newman & Son to this effect and stated their reasons. Messrs. Newman & Son and allied interests control the street railway systems of six Southern cities—Memphis, Nashville, Knoxville, Little Rock, Birmingham and New Orleans—and they have proposed a plan for consolidation under a single management by which the stockholders of the different companies are to turn over their stock to the holding company, receiving in return a certain amount of stock in the holding company. The stockholders of the Nashville company made such a vigorous protest that that company has been omitted from the calculations and the Louisville holders of the Memphis company feel hopeful of accomplishing the same result. The Louisville stockholders' petition is as follows:

"As holders of various amounts of stock in the Memphis Street Railway Company, we, the undersigned, wish to protest against the carrying out of your proposed plan for forming a holding company that shall take over the Memphis road, together with other properties that you control, giving in exchange therefor securities of the holding company. We have purchased the securities of the Memphis Street Railway Company upon our faith and belief in the future growth and prosperity of that city, and do not care to have it linked with other properties concerning which we know but little, and in which we have no interest. We deem your proposed plan an unjust one, and wish to say that we are unwilling to turn over our Memphis securities in exchange for securities in your proposed company. If you attempt to carry it through it will cause not only great dissatisfaction to us, but to other holders of those securities whom we know. We sincerely trust that you will leave the Memphis property out of your proposed plans."

While, of course, nothing more than an approximate estimate of the undigested securities is possible, the amount of bonds can be conservatively placed at $250,000,000, according to the Journal of Commerce. Taking into consideration the only partly absorbed stock offerings, the aggregate would easily exceed $300,000,000. In view of this situation the prospects of heavy syndicate underwritings being announced during the next few months does not find favor in bond circles, it being pointed out that the glut of securities is to-day fully as bad if not worse than in 1903, though the quality is admittedly better. On every hand the same lament is heard that the investment demand has been almost stifled, particularly for gilt-edged railroad bonds of the 3½ and 4 per cent. class. There is no lack of money available for investment, but more profitable employment can be found elsewhere. It is a case of undigested rather than—as was in large measure the fact in 1903—indigestible. Were the yield of the bond underwritings tied up in first hands more nearly time money rates no difficulty would be experienced in their absorption.

In some quarters it is true that a better inquiry is remarked which in view of the July disbursements, estimated at $150,000,000, might conceivably develop into a fairly brisk business. Fears are expressed, however, that large bankers the moment the demand becomes active will pick the psychological moment and flood the market with new securities, and bond houses as a result will continue loaded with previous underwritings."

As stated, there is little likelihood of any early change in prevailing conditions, owing to impending new underwritings. Railroad construction is progressing at an almost unprecedented rate, the total being estimated at fully 25,000 miles. Thus, the St. Paul is only awaiting a favorable opportunity to put out more securities, the same being true of the New York Central. Among the fresh underwritings likely to be announced during the next six months are the following:

St. Paul	$50,000,000
New York Central	50,000,000
United States Steel	50,000,000
Wabash	50,000,000
Great Northern	25,000,000
Seaboard	25,000,000
Total	$250,000,000

"Among the copper shares those of the Ely (Nevada) District, the Nevada Consolidated, Gtroux Consolidated and Cumberland-Ely were all strong and active," says James O'Brien in his weekly curb letter. "This is due to the fact that the railroad to Ely is progressing at a rapid rate, and it will not be long until the entire distance of 141 miles has been graded."

The Chesapeake and Ohio pool is still busily engaged in attempting to force the management to pay 3 per cent. on the stock and thus aid in distributing its holdings. Last year much disappointment resulted from the action of the Chesapeake and Ohio directors in declaring a 1 per cent. rate, although a much larger return was earned on the stock. It is argued that with the road showing an earning capacity of 7 per cent. it could easily pay 3 per cent. It remains to be seen whether the management, which is under Pennsylvania control, will see fit to discontinue its previously conservative methods.

There were several bullish factors to influence the movement in West Penn Railways shares, says the Pittsburg Leader. The Republican State platform contains a plank, which, if it becomes a law, will be of special benefit to the traction companies. This plank is the one relating to the carrying of freight by the traction lines. The West Penn Railways passes through a thickly settled territory in the Connellsville district. With the right to haul freight the value of its franchises and equipment would increase 100 per cent. The company is now earning about 2 per cent. on the common stock. The securities are listed in Louisville, and the market there has been stronger than in Pittsburg. Early in the week the stock sold at 23. Friday it closed at 25¼ and Saturday opened at 29 and immediately rose to 30. Preferred advanced a point to 72. These advances were on light buying.

TRANSVAAL GOLD OUTPUT.

The official declaration of the Transvaal gold output for May, made in London on Saturday, gives a total of 461,202 ounces, which constitutes a new high monthly record, not excluding the pre-war period. Hitherto the best month was September, 1899, just before the war broke out, when, owing to the forced working of the richest ores available—the mine-owners did not know what might happen—the total reached 459,709 ounces. The current year promises to eclipse all former records in the matter of yield. For the first five months of 1906 the total production amounts to 2,180,474 ounces, compared with 2,140,602 in 1899 and 1,948,458 last year. The grand aggregate for 1906 ought to exceed 5,000,000 ounces. As a result of Chinese labor it is calculated that in each of the three great classes—white wages, unskilled wages and stores—£1,000,000 more was paid out last year than in 1904. The gradual advancement in the production of gold due to Chinese is one of the most noteworthy features of the year's operations, for at the beginning of the year it represented 20 per cent., while at the end it was as much as 33 1-3 per cent.

United States	80,723,200	86,338,000
Australia	87,100,852	85,522,000
Russia	25,075,358	24,000,000
Canada	16,400,000	14,429,000
Mexico	12,605,300	13,500,000
British India	11,602,464	11,634,000
Rhodesia	4,820,223	7,430,000
All other	30,816,966	31,517,000

dend of 1¾ per cent., payable July 2. Books close June 18 and reopen July 3.

Forty-three roads for fourth week May show average gross increase 14.20 per cent.

Hocking Railway Company declared usual semi-annual dividends of 2 per cent. on preferred stock and of 1½ per cent. on its common, payable July 16.

MARKET LETTERS.

New York.—When the San Francisco disaster occurred, Wall street was in line for an extended upward movement. The big financial interests all had large lines of stocks and the rank and file had the tip to get aboard. This was based on the belief that easier money would prevail, the Secretary of the Treasury having announced his willingness to practically pay the interest cost of gold in transit, thus assuring large imports. Out of a clear sky came the disaster, and after a day or two of hesitation and incredulity the market took a violent downward plunge, and the big people who had most of the stocks were left with the goods. Many of the unfortunates of smaller caliber who had followed in their wake were compelled to throw over their holdings, and never but once before in our twenty years' experience in Wall street have we seen such a slaughter of the larger professionals as occurred about six weeks ago. The other instance was at the time of the famous Venezuelan panic, which also came very unexpectedly. Now we find the market with prices considerably below the high level at which these large lines were accumulated, and with mid-summer and autumn approaching, with its possibilities of tight money and political disturbance, the big people who still have the stocks are making a determined effort to draw in the public so as to dispose of their wares. It remains to be seen how successful they are going to be.—(Post & Flagg to John W. and D. S. Green.

New York.—There was some disappointment that the market did not respond this morning to the advance that started just before the close yesterday. This encouraged the traders who sold in the last hour and endeavored to make a weak closing. We believe, however, that the high-priced dividend payers are being picked up for strong people.—(Kelley, Miller & Co. to Almstedt Bros.

New York.—St. Paul was the feature, advancing above 181 on heavy buying orders. The buying in this stock caused a decline in the rest of the market, some people fearing a repetition of the Northern Pacific episode. We believe, however, that St. Paul is going up on its merits, outside buying and a very heavy short interest. The demand for the stock tonight in the loan crowd is very large. Although erratic in its movements, we believe that the market will work towards a higher level.—(Dominick & Dominick to Halsey & Halsey.

New York.—St. Paul touched 181¾, the highest price reached on this movement. Importance was attached in the room to the statement that Jessup & Lamont had called in large amounts of money yesterday which it was assumed was for the purpose of paying for heavy purchases of St. Paul by Standard Oil interests.—(Ex. Norton & Co. to J. J. B. Hilliard & Son.

New York.—We are of the opinion that the trading position will be the best during the present crop uncertainty, but we would buy standard stocks when they are weak.—(Ware & Leland.

New York.—The further rise in St. Paul kept the street guessing. It looks like a campaign against shorts. The monetary position is all right. The stock market will continue to hang largely on crop news. We would advise buying on any setbacks.—(C. I. Hudson & Co. to T. C. Henning & Co.

New York.—The market remains in a trading position in some of the leading issues at present such as Union Pacific, Reading, Copper and Smelter, and we believe these securities should be bought on any recessions such as we have seen this afternoon.—(Hutton & Co. to John L. Dunlap.

New York.—It is certain that there has been no selling pressure of consequence for a number of days and the general list has slowly but steadily advanced, apparently without active support from the banking interests. As existing conditions are favorable and prospects assuring, there seems to be nothing in the way of a substantial further advance in the better class of stocks.—(A. O. Brown & Co. to Hunt, Bridgeford & Co.

New York.—Taking the market as a whole the price movement is gradually narrowing to a position of absolute summer dullness. It seems to us the best plan to hold off until the market displays some definite tendency.—(J. S. Bache & Co. to Washington Flexner & Co.

New York.—The public interest in the market is very small, and the professional element are said to be working for a reaction. The large interests have recently resorted to the manipulation of specialties in an effort to stimulate public interest, but the crop situation at present is having a depressing effect, and although money is easy, it is generally thought that rates will harden in the near future. We think the market will recede from the present level.—(W. L. Lyons & Co.

STOCK MARKET REVIEW.

New York, June 12.—Money on call easy at 2¼@3 per cent.; ruling rate 3; closing bid 2½; offered at 3; time loans dull and steady; 60 days 4@4½ per cent.; 90 days 4¼@4½; six months 4¾@5; prime mercantile paper 5@5½. Sterling exchange heavy at $4.86@4.8605 for demand and at $4.83@4.8305 for 60-day bills; posted rates $4.84 and $4.87; commercial bills $4.82¾. Bar silver 64⅝c. Mexican dollars 50¼c. Government bonds strong. Railroad bonds irregular.

Further dullness was shown in the stock market to-day. The movement for the most part upward in the early hours was largely in the high-priced issues, such as Delaware and Hudson, the spring wheat lines, which embraced St. Paul and the Hill roads, Union Pacific, New York Central, Illinois Central, Pennsylvania and its allied lines and the Gould properties. Reports of a coming contest to overthrow the present management of the Delaware and Hudson Company and charges of extravagance and lack of progress, received little credit, inasmuch as it is generally known that the stock is closely held and could hardly be acquired in the open market. St. Paul and the other grain carriers were favorably affected at the outset by the previous day's reports of the high average shown for spring wheat in the Northwest. Pennsylvania's strength followed unconfirmed rumors of the successful consummation of the company's Paris loan, which has been hanging fire for the past fortnight. The improved showing of the Gould properties was accepted as a direct reflection on the optimistic statements attributed to their titular head. There was no other news to account for the better tone of the market, certainly none of a specific character, though general satisfaction seems to be felt at the crop and business conditions of the country. In this connection it may be stated that Wall Street, especially the less conservative element, is viewing with unusual complacency the adjournment of Congress, now almost in sight. The heaviest purchases of stocks to-day were made by influential houses whose names are generally linked with the operations of large investors. The so-called commission houses and professionals as a whole were decidedly less conspicuous in the day's business. This would seem to imply that the big interests which have been under the market for months past show no disposition to abandon their position.

Business dwindled and prices sagged before the end of the morning session. Traders took a hand and played for a reaction in which they were partly successful. Undoubtedly the principal reason for the setback of the late session came from the weekly crop report which told of a lack of rain in Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Missouri and Virginia, while severe drouths were reported from southern Texas and the central Gulf districts, and too much rain in the upper Missouri Valley and upper Lake regions. Concurrent with this news came a boom in wheat and the other commodity markets, which seemed to be engineered by the coterie of professionals so often prominent in stocks. St. Paul's upward course was not arrested, despite the statement from an authoritative source that the company's plans for financing the Pacific Coast extension are not to be disclosed in the immediate future. That stock was almost the one strong feature of the late trading, though Pennsylvania held firm. Among the weak issues were Union Pacific, Amalgamated Copper and Reading, while the general list reflected a heavy undertone.

The closing was fairly active with a feeble rally which advanced prices from the lowest level. For the most part, however, the day's gains were wiped out.

Money market conditions were unchanged, call loans ruling around 3 per cent. The demand for time loans was light. Movements on foreign exchange were uninteresting beyond a steady absorption of bills. Returns of currency from the Pacific Coast were smaller than usual, while a transfer of $1,750,000 to that center for shipment to the Philippines attracted some attention. This is believed to represent the recent sale of bonds in this market for the insular government. A number of railroad returns, mostly gross earnings for the first ten months of the fiscal year, were reported, and all showed marked gains. Wabash reached an increase of almost $325,000 in net for April.

FOREIGN FINANCIAL.

London, June 12.—Money was in good demand to-day for the settlement, but supplies were plentiful. Discounts were firm. On the Stock Exchange business was poor, with no interesting feature. The settlement progressed favorably with easier carry-over rates. Gilt-edged securities generally sagged, but business in home rails for the new account was better. The announcement of an Irish land stock issue of $35,000,000 at 80 caused a firmer close of gilt-edged stocks. Foreigners were more cheerful, owing to a moderate recovery of Russians. Americans were the firmest section. They opened at over parity and a fair amount of business was transacted during the forenoon at hardening prices. Later New York sent buying orders, the market improved and prices closed firm. Baltimore and Ohio was the feature. Kaffirs improved slowly. Copper shares were again favored and hardened. Japanese Imperial 6s closed at 102. The closing quotations were: Consols for money 88 15-16; do for the account 89¼; Anaconda 13¾; Atchison 93⅝; do preferred 106⅝; Baltimore and Ohio 114⅝; Canadian Pacific 165½; Chesapeake and Ohio 60½; Chicago Great Western 19⅝; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul 185; De Beers 18; Denver and Rio Grande 48⅝; do preferred 91½; Erie 47⅝; do 1st preferred 82; do 2d preferred 73½; Illinois Central 187; Louisville and Nashville 154; Missouri, Kansas and Texas 36⅝; New York Central 145; Norfolk and Western 90⅝; do preferred 95; Ontario and Western 52¼; Pennsylvania 69⅛; Rand Mines 6⅝; Reading 73¾; do 1st preferred 47; do 2d preferred 50; Southern Railway 39½; do preferred 103; Southern Pacific 68⅝; Union Pacific 156½; do preferred 98; United States Steel 42¼; do preferred 109⅝; Wabash 21¼; do preferred 50⅝; Spanish 4s 93½. Bar silver steady at 29 13-16d per ounce. The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 3½ per cent. The rate of discount in the open market for three-months' bills is 3 7-16@3½ per cent. Bullion amounting to £166,000 was taken into the Bank of England to-day and £11,000 was withdrawn for shipment to South America.

Paris, June 12.—Prices on the Bourse to-day were irregular and business was dull. Russian Imperial 4s were quoted at 79.60 and Russian bonds of 1904 at 489. Three per cent. rentes 98f 22½c for the account. Exchange on London 25f 17½c for checks.

St. Petersburg, June 12.—The volume of offerings on the Bourse to-day was not so large as yesterday and prices steadied somewhat. Imperial 4s closing unchanged and 5s losing an eighth and closing at 87.58.

Berlin, June 12.—Trading on the Boerse today was dull. Exchange on London 20m 48¾pfgs. for checks. Discount rates: Short bills 3¼ per cent; three months' bills 3⅝ per cent.

LEAF TOBACCO.

Tuesday Evening, June 12.—The sales on the local auction breaks to-day were very small, only 133 hogsheads being offered. Nevertheless the market was more active than it was any day last week and all grades met with good competition at firm prices. The quality of the Burley offerings was fair and prices ran as high as $11.75. The market for dark tobacco showed no change and the different types met with good demand. Old tobaccos were offered in limited quantities and were mostly of the low and inferior types.

The following is the report of offerings to-day on the Louisville market, including all the warehouses:

	Hhds.
Burley	35
Dark	98
Total	133
Original inspections	107
Reviews	26

Sales were reported as follows:

Burley.

Adair County—5 hhds at $8.60 to 7.40.
Breckenridge County—3 hhds at $9.30 to 7.
Henry County—3 hhds at $8.20 to 5.95.

Breckenridge County—6 hhds at $8.50 to 3.55.
Metcalfe County—1 hhd at $6.30.
Taylor County—2 hhds at $6.90 and 5.35.
Tennessee—18 hhds at $9.10 to 5.25; 9 at $5.15 to 8.50.

Cincinnati Market.

Cincinnati, June 12.—(Special.)—The tobacco market as a whole proved to be very satisfactory to-day. All old types and all new except low grade tobaccos brought good prices and ruled firm. The low grades of new were comparatively weak. Total 78 hhds. New—33; 10 at $6.35@7.95; 19 at $8@9.95; 2 at $10 and $10.75; 2 at $12 and $13.25. Old—45; 8 at $5.20@5.85; 20 at $6@7.95; 11 at $8@9.90; 7 at $10@11.50; 3 at $12.50@14; 1 at $13.75.

LIVE STOCK MARKETS.

Louisville.

(Reported by the Central Live Stock Exchange, Central Stock Yards.)

Louisville, June 12.—Cattle—Receipts light, though fully enough here to supply the demand. The market ruled very quiet from start to finish, there being very little demand for anything except the choice handy-weight butcher stuff; that class sold at steady prices, but the common, half-fat grassy stuff seems to sell a shade lower from day to day, and it is almost impossible to sell them at anything like satisfactory prices. The demand for stockers and feeders is limited; only the choice grades are wanted. Bulls and canners slow sale. No heavy shipping cattle here; feeling unchanged. There is no improvement to note in the milch cow trade; the best grades are selling fairly well, while in most cases it is hard to get a bid on the common, thin, small cows.

Calves—Receipts light; market steady; best veals $5.50@6; common calves dull and draggy.

Hogs—Receipts liberal, but with a good local and shipping demand the market ruled active and 5@10c higher on all grades; we quote best, 120 pounds and up, $6.50; heavy pigs $6.15; light pigs $5.50; roughs $4.75@5.85. The market closed fully steady.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts liberal for Tuesday; market fully steady; the best lambs sold readily at $7.75; seconds $6.50@6.75; good butcher lambs $6@6.50; tail-ends $5@6; best fat sheep $5@5.50; fair to good $3.50@4.50; common $2.50@3; bucks $2.50@4; best stock ewes $4@4.50; common old ewes not wanted.

(Reported by the Louisville Live Stock Exchange, Bourbon Stock Yards.)

Louisville, June 12.—Cattle—Fresh receipts of cattle to-day were light, only 11 head; for the two days 1,660. The attendance of buyers was comparatively light to-day and the market exceedingly quiet from start to finish; however, the sales reported were on the basis of yesterday's values. The desirable, well-finished butcher cattle continued in stronger favor than any other class, but the trade on the common and medium kinds was exceedingly dull. This was especially true regarding the grassy, half-fat kinds and sales hard to effect even at the decline noted yesterday. No improvement noted in the feeder and stocker trade; likewise milch cows. Bulls and canners about steady; feeling on heavy cattle about normal. Pens fairly well cleared, but the market closed quiet.

Calves—Receipts 95 head; for the two days 197. The market was practically unchanged; bulk of best $5.50@6; common kinds hard to sell.

Hogs—Receipts of hogs to-day 599 head; for the week thus far 2,921 head. A good demand prevailed to-day for all grades and, the supply being limited, prices generally scored an advance; best, 160 pounds and up, $6.55; 120 to 160 pounds $6.40; pigs $5@6.10; roughs $5.85 down. Offerings all sold and the market closed steady.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts of sheep and lambs 1,512 head; for the two days 8,866. The market continued firm on choice lambs today and, while the bulk of offerings changed hands at steady figures ($7.75@7.85), a few cars of extra good lambs sold at $8; other grades steady. There was also a good demand for fat sheep at steady values; $5.50 for the best. Stock ewe trade unchanged. Pens well cleared; not enough top lambs here to supply demand.

New York.

New York, June 12.—Beeves—Receipts 662. Feeling steady; dressed beef in moderate demand at 7½@8½c per pound for native sides; extra beef 8¾c; latest Liverpool and London cables quoted live cattle slow at 11@12c; tops at London 12¼c; dressed weights, refrigerator beef selling at 8¾@9¼c per lb.; sheep steady; exports to-day 1,020 cattle, 675 sheep and 2,700 quarters of beef; to-morrow 2,850 quarters of beef. Calves—Receipts 81; feeling steady; dressed calves steady; city dressed veals 8@11c per lb.; extra carcasses 11½c; country dressed 7@9½c; dressed buttermilks 6@7c. Sheep and Lambs—Receipts 487 head; sheep firm; lambs steady. Good demand; one car held over. Sheep $4.25@5.90; lambs $8.25@8.85; yearlings nominal. Hogs—Receipts 3,498; nominally firm and quiet on Buffalo advices.

Kansas City.

Kansas City, June 12.—Cattle—Receipts 12,500, including 1,200 Southern; market steady to 10c lower; choice export and dressed beef steers $5.25@5.75; fair to good $4@5.15; Western fed steers $3.50@5.25; stockers and feeders $2.75@4.50; Southern steers $3@4.80; Southern cows $2.25@3.75; native cows $2.25@4.35; native heifers $3.25@5; bulls $2.50@4; calves $2.50@6.35. Hogs—Receipts 22,000; market 5@10c lower to $6.50; bulk of sales $6.30@6.45; heavy $6.40@6.50; packers $6.30@6.45; pigs and lights $5.50@6.40. Sheep—Receipts 11,400; market strong and active; lambs $5.50@7.50; fed sheep and yearlings $5@6.50; Texas clipped yearlings $5.75@6.50; Texas-clipped sheep $4.75@6.25; Texas goats $3.25@3.80; stockers and feeders $3.25@5.

Chicago.

Chicago, June 12.—Cattle—Receipts 3,500; steady; common to prime steers $4@6.10; cows $3@4.50; heifers $2.75@5; bulls $3.25@4.25; calves $6@7; stockers and feeders $2.75@4.75. Sheep—Receipts 15,000; steady; sheep $4.50@6.25; yearlings $5.90@6.50; shorn lambs $5.25@7.15.

Cincinnati.

Cincinnati, O., June 12.—Hogs strong; butchers and shippers $6.70; common $5.50@6.50. Cattle steady; fair to good shippers $4.25@5; common $2@2.75. Sheep steady at $3.50@5; lambs steady at $6@8.

CHICAGO GRAIN.

Chicago, June 12.—Reports of damage by drouth to fall-sown wheat in Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska imparted strength to the local wheat market to-day. At the close the July option was up ¼@⅜c. Corn showed a gain of 1½c. Oats were up ⅝@¾c. Provisions were unchanged to 7½@10c lower.

Strength in the wheat market developed soon after the opening. At the start sentiment in the pit was bearish because of the higher condition of winter wheat as outlined in the Government report issued just before the close of yesterday's session. Another reason for the weak undertone was the absence of rain in the Northwest. During the few minutes of trading there was free selling by commission houses and pit traders, but offerings were eagerly taken by a number of the leading bulls. Before the end of the first hour sentiment had become bullish and throughout the remainder of the session the bears were in full retreat. The change of sentiment was due chiefly to numerous reports of damage by dry weather to the wheat crops of Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska. A report from Kansas City claimed that the crops in that section had deteriorated 50 per cent. during the past week and that the grain was ripening prematurely. A decrease of 5,200,000 bushels in the world's visible supply as shown by Bradstreet's, acted as a further stimulant to buyers. Trading was active the entire day. Late in the session there was a moderate reaction on profit-taking, but the market closed firm. July opened ⅛ to ⅝@½c lower, at 83⅝ to 83¼@83⅝c, sold off to 83⅛c and then advanced to 84⅝@84⅝c. Final quotations were at 84¼c. Clearances of wheat and flour were equal to 107,532 bushels. Primary receipts were 271,000 bushels, compared with 288,000 bushels for the corresponding day one year ago. Minneapolis, Duluth and Chicago reported receipts of 228 cars against 222 cars last week and 202 cars a year ago.

Trading in the corn pit was active, and after moderate weakness early in the day, the market developed decided strength. Drouth conditions in Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska formed the basis of the urgent demand which characterized trading during the last half of the session. Cash houses reported light acceptances from the country, and this helped to advance prices on the local market. The early weakness was due to lower cables and to the easier tone of wheat. Prices receded somewhat from the highest point on profit-taking, but a strong tone prevailed at the close. July opened ⅛@¼c to ¼@⅜c lower, at 51⅝@51¼c, advanced to 53⅝@53⅝c and closed at 53¼@53⅜c. Local receipts were 416 cars, with 191 cars of contract grade.

Strength of wheat and corn had a bullish effect on the oats market. The Government report was construed as being quite favorable to the bulls, and reports of damage by drouth also inspired considerable buying of an investment character. Trading in the pit was active all day. The market closed strong. July opened unchanged to ⅛c lower, at 37⅝ to 37⅝c, sold up to 38⅝c and closed at 38¼@38⅜c. Local receipts were 163 cars.

Notwithstanding higher prices for live hogs and the sharp advance in grain prices, the provisions market was inclined to weakness. Liberal receipts of live hogs at Western packing centers inspired selling by pit traders, and the market lacked a definite support, local packers taking little part in the trading. At the close September pork was unchanged at $16.65; September lard was off 5@7½c, at $9@9.02½; September ribs were 7½@10c lower, at $9.30.

Flour—Receipts 26,466 bbls.; exports 5,550; sales 7,300 packages; market firm, but very quiet. Rye flour steady. Corn meal firm. Rye dull. Barley nominal.

Wheat—Receipts 3,000 bu.; sales 3,850,000 bu. futures. Spot market firm; No. 2 red 95c nominal in elevator and 96c nominal f. o. b. afloat; No. 1 Northern Duluth 94½c f. o. b. afloat; No. 1 Northern Manitoba 96½c f. o. b. afloat. There was a big trade in wheat to-day, with a very irregular market. Prices opened off on easy cables and the bearish crop report, but recovered and went to a new high record on heavy covering, bull support, outside buying, bad crop news and a big decrease in world's stocks. The close was ¼@⅜c net higher; July 89⅝@91c, closed 90⅛c; September 88@89⅝c, closed 88⅝c; December 89¼@90⅝c, closed 90c.

Corn—Receipts 95,675 bu.; exports 660; sales 170,000 bu. futures. Spot market strong; No. 2 60c nominal in elevator and 60½c nominal f. o. b. afloat; No. 2 yellow 61c; No. 2 white 61c nominal. New high records for the season also appeared in corn to-day as a result of active covering, less favorable crop news and small stocks. Final prices showed 1⅝@1⅝c net advance; July 58⅝@60c, closed 59⅞c; September 58⅝@60¼c, closed 60c; December 58⅝@59¼c, closed 59¼c.

Oats—Receipts 130,900 bu.; exports 1,400; spot market firm; mixed oats, 26@32 lbs., 41½c; natural white, 30@33 lbs., 42@45½c; clipped white, 38@40 lbs., 44@45½c.

Feed firm; spring bran $19.50 to arrive; middlings $19.75 to arrive. Hay steady. Hops quiet. Hides, leather, wool and beef steady. Cut meats steady; pickled shoulders 8@8½c; pickled hams 11⅝@12¼c. Lard steady; Western prime $8.90, nominal; refined steady. Pork steady. Tallow barely steady. Cotton-seed oil and petroleum steady. Rosin firm; strained, common to good $4.15. Turpentine firm at 69½@61c. Rice and molasses steady.

Metals—There was a sharp break in the London tin market, where speculative liquidation was the feature with spot closing at £175 15s and futures £175 5s, or over £5 below the closing figures of yesterday. Local sentiment seems to favor the idea of a further decline, it being urged that the statistical position is not as favorable as it was some months ago, while the speculative long interest is still considered large. The local market was weak and lower at $38.80@39. Copper was 2s 6d higher in the London market, at £86 5s for spot and £85 for futures. Locally copper was unchanged, with lake at $18.75@19; electrolytic $18.37½@18.75; casting $18.25@18.37½. Lead was 2s 6d lower, at £16 17s 6d for spot in the London market. Locally the market was quiet and unchanged, with quotations ranging from $5.75 to $5.95. Spelter unchanged at £27 15s in London, but advanced to $6.05@6.15 in the local market. Iron was lower abroad, with standard foundry closing at 50s 4d and Cleveland warrants at 50s 6d. Locally iron was quiet and unchanged. No. 1 Foundry Northern is quoted at $18.75@19; No. 2 Foundry Northern and No. 1 Foundry Southern at $18.25@18.50; No. 2 Foundry Southern at $17.75@18.

St. Louis.

St. Louis, June 12.—Wheat—Futures higher; cash dull; No. 2 red cash in elevator 87@88c, on track 86@89c; July 81⅛c; September 81⅝c; No. 2 hard 80@82½c. Corn higher; No. 2 cash nominal, on track 51@51½c; July 50⅝c; September 51⅝c. Oats higher; No. 2 cash 36c, on track 37c; July 37⅝@37½c; September 36⅝c; No. 2 white 38c. Lead higher; $5.90¼ bid. New York Dry Goods.

New York, June 12.—The dry goods market was steady for the day. Revisions in the prices of bleached sheetings have been announced and others are to follow. They are on a basis about 3 per cent. lower than the price at which wide sheetings have been selling. Export trade is very dull with China and Red Sea ports. Cotton yarns are firmer.

And that accounts for many of the losses constantly occurring. Money is kept in some insecure place, when it should be deposited in the Savings department of

We Greet You!

We welcome you back to Kentucky; back to Louisville; back to Levy's. To the same old Kentucky, the same old Louisville, the same old Levy's—but all touched by the magic hand of Progress; and, under the nurturing care of Time, developed into something greater than you used to know.

Everything's Yours!

We've "put the big pot in the little pot" (with the "lid" not on until Sunday) and dressed up in our best clothes and our broadest smiles to make you have a good time every minute you are here. So don't be bashful! Help yourselves to everything in sight; and if there's anything you want that you don't see, call for it and it will be forthcoming.

DEATH'S SECOND BLOW

ABOUT TO STRIKE DOWN DEAD WOMAN'S HUSBAND.

Moses Bell Dying At His Home In Which Wife's Body Lies.

Moses Bell is dying and his wife is dead at their home, 2536 Crop street. Mrs. Bell died Monday night at 10:40 o'clock of consumption and Mr. Bell, who has been a sufferer from heart disease for several years, gradually grew worse from worry as he saw his wife slowly sinking to her death. He nursed her in an effort to prolong her life, until he himself broke down from the strain and now he lies at the point of death.

Mrs. Bell was born at English, Ind., forty-three years ago, her maiden name being Jennie M. Overby. She is the second wife of Mr. Bell, and, although she had no children of her own, she reared the four children of Mr. Bell as if she were their mother. They were at her bedside when she died.

The family moved from Crawford county to Louisville fifteen years ago, and have made this city their home ever since. Mr. Bell is a carpenter, but has not worked at his trade for some time because of a stroke of paralysis some time ago.

Four stepchildren survive Mrs. Bell in addition to her husband. They are Mrs. Ellen Howe, of Helena, Ark.; Charles E. Bell, of the United States Marine Corps, stationed at Norfolk, Va., and Walter and Arthur Bell, of this city. The funeral services were held at the home yesterday afternoon and the body will be taken to English, Ind., this afternoon.

STUBBORN FIRE

Causes $15,000 Damage On Brook Street.

SIX FRAME BUILDINGS ARE QUICKLY DESTROYED.

FALSE REPORT REGARDING LOSS OF LIFE.

TWO ALARMS ARE SOUNDED.

Fire, believed to have been caused by sparks from a small open stove which is used for drying fruits in a room in the house occupied by Mrs. Mary Garvey and others, at 323 Brook street, was discovered at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. It spread with great rapidity, and before the firemen succeeded in getting it under control it had destroyed six houses and caused damage that is roughly estimated at $15,000. The tenants whose losses were the heaviest were Arabians and Italians who do not speak English, and in their excitement and despair over the destruction of their property could not indicate just what their possessions consisted of, although it is understood that valuable Oriental rugs and bric-a-brac were burned.

The fire was discovered by Mrs. Garvey. An alarm was turned in from box 23, at Brook and Jefferson streets, by Albert Snyder. The section is a thickly congested one, and two other alarms were sounded. The fire department fought the conflagration for two and a half hours. A stiff breeze was blowing from the southwest, and it was with difficulty that the fire was confined to the block on Brook street between Jefferson and Market.

A report was spread a few minutes after the firemen reached the scene that four children in the house at 327 Brook street had been burned to death. Later the father of the children, Peter Gargotto, found them, interested spectators of the fire, in a yard in the rear of the house.

Most of the burned buildings were of wooden construction, and were swept away like tinder. But a few blackened beams and charred side walls remain of what had been the homes, it is said, of sixty-five persons.

The burned buildings include the two-story frame residence at 323 Brook street, occupied by Mrs. Mary Garvey; the two-story brick dwelling at 325 Brook street, occupied by Frank Gentile; two-story frome lodging-house of Peter Gargotto, at 327 Brook street; two-story frame house of Thomas Carraro at 329 Brook street; feed store of Walter Shadburn at 331 Brook street; two-story frame house at 335 Brook street, and residence of D. Miller at 203 East Jefferson street.

DOWIE WHEELED TO WITNESS STAND.

He Looks Squarely At Voliva While Testifying, But Latter Looks Another Way.

Chicago, June 12.—John Alexander Dowie, founder of Zion City and first apostle of the Christian Catholic Church, was the star witness to-day in the trial of the issue of who is the owner of Zion City before Judge Landis, in the United States Circuit Court. As Dr. Dowie was wheeled in a chair to the witness stand the ravages of the disease from which he is suffering were plainly evident in his wasted body.

Dowie's testimony was in the main a recital of the history of his life up to the time he was deposed by General Overseer Wilbur Glenn Voliva. While relating the hardships and trials met with in his efforts to gain a foothold in the religious world and the obstacles placed in his way when the Zion City movement was in its infancy, Dowie looked squarely at Voliva, the man whom he had placed confidence in and who is now at the head of Zion, but the latter did not return the gaze.

At the conclusion of his testimony Dowie was wheeled to his carriage and returned to the Virginia Hotel.

LOUISVILLE PEOPLE WED IN JEFFERSONVILLE.

Miss Katie Duffy, of Campbellsburg, Ky., and John Speed, of Louisville, were married in Jeffersonville yesterday by Magistrate Benjamin T. Nixon. The groom is a bricklayer and was born in Louisville on July 31, 1884. The bride was born in Campbellsburg on August 12, 1884.

Miss Katherine, a seamstress, and John B. Ramp, a machinist, both residents of Louisville, were married by the same Magistrate. Ramp was born August 11, 1884, and the bride on September 1, 1883.

DAYTON, KY., MAN ENDS LIFE IN DETROIT.

Detroit, Mich., June 12.—[Special.]—After quarreling with his wife, Joseph Fisher, aged twenty-two, No. 358 Morrell street, took carbolic acid at the Michigan Malleable iron works, where he was employed, about 10 o'clock today and died at Red Cross Hospital shortly after. Fisher arrived in Detroit from Dayton, Ky., about two weeks ago, and immediately secured work at the iron works.

BUILDING FOOD

To Bring the Babies Around.

When a little human machine (or a large one) goes wrong, nothing is so important as the selection of food to bring it around again.

"My little baby boy fifteen months old had pneumonia, then came brain fever, and no sooner had he got over these than he began to cut teeth and, being so weak, he was frequently thrown into convulsions," says a Colorado mother.

"I decided a change might help, so took him to Kansas City for a visit. When we got there he was so very weak when he would cry he would sink away and seemed like he would die.

"When I reached my sister's home she said immediately that we must feed him Grape-Nuts, and, although I had never used the food, we got some and for a few days gave him just the juice of Grape-Nuts and milk. He got stronger so quickly we were soon feeding him the Grape-Nuts itself and in a wonderfully short time he fattened right up and became strong and well.

"That showed me something worth knowing and, when later on my girl came, I raised her on Grape-Nuts and she is a strong healthy baby and has been. You will see from the little photograph I send you what a strong, chubby youngster the boy is now, but he didn't look anything like that before we found this nourishing food. Grape-Nuts nourished him back to strength when he was so weak he couldn't keep any other food on his stomach." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

All children can be built to a more sturdy and healthy condition upon Grape-Nuts and cream. The food contains the elements nature demands, from which to make the soft gray filling in the nerve centers and brain. A well fed brain and strong, sturdy nerves absolutely insure a healthy body.

BOOM FOR KERN

Indiana Democrats To Send Delegation To New York In His Interest.

Indianapolis, Ind., June 12.—[Special.]—The Democrats of Indiana will have a candidate for second place on the National ticket with William J. Bryan in the person of John W. Kern, who was the party nominee for Governor in 1900 and again 1904. Kern is not an original Bryan man, but was opposed to free silver up to the time that it entered into the party platform, but he stood squarely on the plank after it was made and supported Bryan locally in both campaigns. He was importuned by the Indiana delegation at St. Louis two years ago to permit his name to be presented for the vice presidential nomination, but he refused to go before the convention as a candidate.

It has been determined to consult with Bryan on his arrival from Europe in August and he will be asked to consider Mr. Kern as his running mate in 1908, it being assumed that he will dictate the nomination to the extent at least that his choice if announced will be the choice of the delegates. A large number of influential Democrats are arranging to join in the New York ovation to Bryan when he reaches that city, and they will take advantage of that occasion to suggest the name of Kern and ask that the Indiana leader be favorably considered. Bryan is expected to make several speeches in Indiana this fall and it is hoped that he will consider Kern's claims favorably.

FINED FOR CAUSING INTOXICATION OF CHILD.

Charged with giving liquor to his infant son until the child fell in a stupor, John Hicks, who lives at 1709 Kentucky street, was fined $10 and placed under a $200 bond for sixty days in the Police Court yesterday morning. Patrolman Goetz, who arrested Hicks, said that he had found the child in a drunken stupor in the alley in the rear of the house, while the father was in the house in a similar condition. The child's mother said that the father had given him the liquor. This is the second time in a week that Hicks has been in the Police Court. The Judge ordered him to pay a fine for the first offense, but it was suspended at the instance of Mrs. Hicks.

DR. BAKER WILL GO TO NEW YORK TO STUDY.

Dr. T. H. Baker, the postmaster, intends to go to New York to take a post-graduate course at the Bellevue Medical School and at the Roosevelt Hospital as soon as his successor, Robert E. Woods, takes charge of the local post-office. He thinks that he will be able to leave in a few weeks. He will spend several years in New York in study and research work, after which he probably will return to practice in this city.

Ohio Town Swept By Fire.

Portsmouth, O., June 12.—Fire swept a large portion of the town of Peebles in Adams county this afternoon, destroying fourteen buildings in all and entailing a loss of over $15,000, on which practically no insurance was carried. Among the buildings destroyed were the Douglas Hotel, Norfolk and Western depot, the Peebles Leader office and several others.

TO BURGLARIZE SUCCESS

Frederick Briand, the well known shorthand expert and congressional reporter says: "If I were 18 years old again and wanted to earn $15,000 a year by the time I was thirty, I would study shorthand and get into the office of some big manufacturing concern as amanuensis. There is no quicker, surer way to burglarize success."
